HUSKERS PLACE 3 GRIDSTERS ON ALL BIG SIX TEAM

Meier, Scherer, Cardwell Capture First String Births.

TEAMS EVENLY MATCHED

Kansas State and Oklahoma Also Land 3 Berths on Conference Eleven.

By Arnold Levine.

Now that the mighty warriors of the Big Six have hung up their shiny silk football pants and sweat begrimed jerseys for another year, many for the last time, there comes up the most difficult, most trying task of attempting to select twenty-two men who may be said to carry on their shoulders the individual honors of the current campaign.

The task this year presents greater obstacles which must be surmounted than in previous years. For 1934 found three teams in the Big Six which just about matched each other in strength, although one of them was outscored by the other two, and those two fighting it out for the mythical championship. Add to this the fact that Kansas State trimmed Nebraska, and another ingredient is added to the by now well-bemuddled mess which was the Big Six during its just completed season. Surprise teams, sophomore stars, thoroly drilled veterans added their say as to what should be done about the title, and these changes from previous years made the job of choosing a star team all the more difficult.

These selections which I am about to present are open to criticism, and no doubt they will have their share. I hope pro, and most certainly con. But there was no team in the Big Six which this year overrated the other five by so great a margin that they might be said to be the "cream". With this in mind, the eleven men I thought best deserved places on the All-Big-Six team necessarily form a greatly representative group. Here they are, first team:

Ends: Poole, Iowa State; Scherer, Nebraska. Tackles: Maddox, Kansas State; Gentry, Oklahoma. Guards: Sklar, Kansas; Stacy, Oklahoma.

"COLLEGE RHYTHM" Coeds!

Today is the last day for the "College Rhythm" color contest. What are the colors of the pennants these co-eds are holding? Rush your answers to Dick Schmidt, business manager of the Daily Nebraskan, along with the other two published Tuesday and Wednesday. The first twenty correct lists of all eight pennant colors will be awarded with a ticket to see "College Rhythm" at the Stuart Theatre starting today. The World Almanac gives the colors of all the colleges in United States on page 413 if this will help you.

DAILY NEBRASKAN ALL BIG SIX TEAM

Table listing the All Big Six Team members for the Daily Nebraskan, including names and positions for the First and Second Teams.

Oklahoma. Center: Meier, Nebraska. Quarterback: Robertson, Oklahoma. Backs: Cardwell, Nebraska; Stoner, Kansas State; Elder, Kansas State. And the alternate nominees: Ends: Bourne, Missouri; Harris, Oklahoma. Tackles: Clawson, Kansas; Flanthrope, Kansas State. Guards: Berger, Iowa State; Bland, Missouri. Center: Griffing, Kansas State. Quarterback: Ayres, Kansas State. Backs: Bauer, Nebraska; Haygood, Kansas; Poyner, Oklahoma.

Ends: Poole, Iowa State's great sophomore, deserves his position as a triple threat man, if an end can be said to have triple threat qualities. Not only was he fast and brilliant on the defensive, but he did his team's punting, kicking off, and placekicking after touchdowns. His blocking landed many an opponent on the turf, while his specialty was getting of "quits" that traveled from sixty to seventy yards into enemy territory. Scherer, a Nebraska junior, won his spurs as a pass receiver and defense man. He hooked balls out of the air for long gains on many occasions, but his feature work was blocking opposing punts. Scarcely a name passed that he did not smear at least one attempted boot, and hurried the punters on others.

Tackles: Maddox, capturing Kansas State to its first Big Six title, was the outstanding tackle of the conference. Bulky, hard-charging and fast, he spelled trouble for many a back on an attempted burst thru the line or around end. Sometimes opponents found him practically playing in their backfield. Oklahoma contributed their gentry, tackle and punter extraordinary, to fill in at the other tackle. Alitto handicapped by illness who caused weakness and fatigue, Gentry kept his team out of danger with long punts down the field, and smashed opposition thru his tackle. Guards: Sklar, playing for Kansas U at Lawrence, was selected for his all around defensive and offensive ability. He can open holes or block them with equal facility, using a bulky body and powerful charges to mow down opposition. Stacy of Oklahoma makes a good partner for Sklar. Faster than Sklar, he went down on punts with the ends, and broke up plunges into the center. Offensively, he led the interference for the fleet Boomer backs, and was an important cog in the offense.

Center: Franklin Meier, selected on several all Americans, takes the pivot position with little trouble from his other league rivals. Hailing from Nebraska, where strong centers are a tradition, Meier retained a joint which he won unanimously last year. At diagnosing plays, directing the defense, and sure tackling, he was the season's finest behind the line. But his defensive powers were overshadowed by his ability to open holes and pass the ball back just where it was wanted. Indoubtedly the Big Six's greatest lineman of the recent season. Quarterback: Robertson, Oklahoma's speedster, deserves his position, but only after a long tussle with Bauer of Nebraska and Ayres of Kansas State. Robertson's ability at the signal calling post, his keen choice of plays and off tackle smashes place him as one of the leading backs in Big Six competition.

Backs: Cardwell, running wild on his home Nebraska's or foreign grids, took the conference by storm in his first year under the Soarlet. His thru tackle and around end runs are not the only reasons for his choice, defensively he is a vicious and sure blocker. As safety man for Nebraska few opposition backs got around him, and when they did he usually caught up with and tackled them from behind. As a pass receiver and interceptor he ranked high. Stoner and Elder, both hailing from Kansas State's championship eleven, are the touchdown kings of the conference. Stoner around end and bouncing off tackle, Elder thru the line, and Kansas State's scoring drives began. Almost singlehandedly, they led the Wildcats in their final stretch to the championship, the game against Nebraska. It was their successful running plays that brought victory. Stoner scoring twice and Elder once. As a passer, Stoner ranks one of the best in the Big Six, and as a blocker, Elder rates special mention.

"No nation can graft upon itself a system foreign to it without great readjustments," he concluded, "and we Americans must find the solution to our difficulties here and not abroad."

COACH THANKS HUSKER BACKERS FOR SUPPORT

Nebraska Mentor Expresses Gratitude for Loyalty at Grid Luncheon.

Dana X. Bible, Nebraska grid mentor, expressed his pleasure at the support given the Nebraska football team by fans thruout the season Wednesday noon, as he appeared as the principal speaker at the annual football luncheon of the Lincoln junior chamber of commerce.

"We are happy that Nebraska football fans were with us in all kinds of weather," said the Husker coach. "The fine support given us by Nebraskans, evidenced by their presence at the games, makes us feel our responsibility keenly and merits the very best from the team, the coaches, and the schedule makers."

Members of the 1934 Cornhusker football squad were also present at the luncheon, as well as other members of the Nebraska coaching staff, Coach Farley of Nebraska Wesleyan, and local high school coaches.
