A Call for a Real Peace Movement.

A WARNING that students must snap out of their lethargy and engage themselves in an honest-to-goodness campaign for peace was sounded by Harry Terrell, representative of the National Council for Prevention of War, speaking before a World Forum luncheon Wednesday.

Workers, not talkers, were called for to lead the movement toward peace. Students were told that they must be prepared to give up a few of their other "activities" if necessary in order to carry out the work of attaining their objective.

The move toward peace by students was described as taking two forms of action. First, the military departments in the universities must be eliminated, and second, there must be much earnest work done in home communities to provide an enlightened public opinion.

The evils of compulsory military training have been pointed out many times. The training of young men in the arts of war provides one of the best psychological incentives to war that has been invented. A feeling that war is inevitable, such as military departments throughout the nation declare, is enough cause in itself to eventually bring on war.

In order to consummate the elimination of this evil there must be a concerted demand on the part of students that compulsory military training be done away with. They must not only confine their demands to the campus, but they carry the word back to the home communities, thereby creating a statewide demand that youth should not be forced into training for war.

Three choices confront the American people, it was stated. In the first place, they may let affairs slide and drift toward isolation, which in turn provides for a great period of arming. The second choice is to deliberately arm to the teeth and become an aggressor, while the third is to conscientiously forward the peace movement.

The second alternative is obviously out of the question. The first has been the choice of American students and people at large too long. It is now time for students to wake up and lead the world toward peace.

The older generation in the past has been too prone to regard the opinions of students as the opinions of a child. This attitude is decidedly wrong, but it is up to the American student body to prove to their elders that they are no longer children, that they have a vital stake in this business of war, and that they are no longer going to tolerate being turned into cannon fodder by worshippers of Mars.

Hearst Has His Effect.

CITY newspapers Wednesday carried two stories that indicated to a great degree the grip which that grand master of sensationalism, William Randolph Hearst, is getting on the nation.

The first article, written by the Associated Press, told of a group of Vassar college students turning lobbyists for a day and descending upon the New York state legislature to enter a protest against a bill requiring all students in schools and colleges supported by the state to pledge allegiance to the constitution.

The sentiment of the group was expressed by one of the girls who declared, "The avowed purpose of the bill is to suppress free speech, although it does not say so on the surface."

"This bill can lead to such a regime as Germany under Hitler."

The second story stated that a bill requiring teachers in public schools, colleges and universities to subscribe to an oath of allegiance to the state and nation had been reported out of committee to the Nebraska house of representatives.

Early in the year Hearst decided that a new flag to wave was needed and communism received the nod. A vigorous campaign against the hated Reds and their activity in the school system was supposedly brought to light by that ardent upholder of "100 percent Americanism." He advocated as a means of combatting red activities, some sort of an oath of allegiance for teachers and students.

While Hearst is on the right side of the fence in his dislike of the Reds, it is suspected that the outcome of his latest drive would be the suppression of all dissenting thought. His proposals are a distinct menace to the academic freedom which students and faculties throughout the nation have fought to gain. It is a move that, as the Vassar student put it, would cut off freedom of speech. It is a tendency toward Hitler's fascism.

Through the medium of his wideflung chain of newspapers, Hearst has prepared the American public to swallow anything that he wishes to shove down its throat. No questions are asked; his word is accepted as gospel truth. It is a reflection of the intelligence of the nation to admit that it so easily succumbs to his propaganda.

Students and people throughout the state who have not allowed Mr. Hearst to sway their good judgment are hoping that the state legislature will see the implication of this bill, and throw it in the ash can, where it belongs.

School Physician Reports Second Measles Epidemic

Dr. R. A. Lyman, dean of the Pharmacy College reported that a second epidemic of measles has broken out on the campus. He attributed this due to exposure from the first group. Dr. Lyman stated that there would probably be a "pretty good run" and then it would die out. There has been approximately 200 cases reported and a number that have not been turned in.

At the University of Minnesota, the undergraduate daily this week proposed two minutes of silent prayer for the student who, when his car collided with another machine, called the other driver a "nit wit," only to discover that it was the dean of his college and also his major adviser. The plan was called off because it was felt two minutes would not be a drop in the bucket for what the student needed.
