

BROWNE DRILLS BASKETEERS ON FUNDAMENTALS

Two Basic Drills Scheduled Before Vacation; Squad To Scrimmage After.

Still hammering hard on the anvil of fundamentals in order to temper a championship basketball quintet, Coach W. H. Browne intends to give his men two more basic drills this week and then reward their efforts with a "breather" lasting until Monday, Dec. 2. The continuance of the workouts will be less monotonous in the fact that they will be punctuated more frequently with scrimmages.

The pair of remaining practices will be devoted to quick break plays, dribbling, goal shooting, lay in shots, and close guarding drills. The former, with the expected altitude of the new squad, are anticipated to be a deadly weapon in the coming schedule. With twenty-odd candidates for varsity berths, the coaching staff intends to spare no time or efforts in the pre-schedule period.

Italy's search for power, land antedates Mussolini. The Mediterranean was fast becoming an English lake. France besides having Algeria also had Corsica, which was a thorn in the side of new Italy. She also feared France might restore the pope to his temporal power. On the north and east Austria menaced. She felt her borders must be rectified.

Feeling the need of friends Italy in 1877 thru her minister, Crispien sounded out the various capitals of Europe and concluded that Germany was her best friend. In the next year at the congress of Berlin the Italian envoy failed to receive any consideration while Australia acquired Bosnia and England annexed Cyprus. This humiliation made the Italians feel their isolation in Europe. They would try Africa.

They cast their eyes across the Mediterranean and fixed their ambitions on Tunis. But France had the same ambition and seeing her interests in danger marched her troops into Tunis in 1881 and extended a protectorate over it. Again Italy turned to Germany not realizing that Bismarck's astute diplomacy caused her to be thwarted by Austria in 1878 and by France in 1881. He now persuaded Italy to forget her old enmity toward Austria and join the defensive military triple alliance. From this time on she was much influenced by the German idea of imperialism and expansion.

Feeling her importance as a member of the triple alliance she revived the old dream of colonial empire. In 1885 she established an Italian colony on the Red Sea where Italian merchants were already operating. This territory, Eritria, is a sandy waste and valuable only as it gives access to the fertile regions of Abyssinia. But when Italian troops in 1887 attempted to invade the highlands of Abyssinia they were cut down at Dogali.

At the same time by a series of treaties with native chiefs, Crispien secured the rocky coast land bordering on the Indian ocean, called Somaliland.

He also signed in 1889 the treaty of Uccial with Menelik, Negus of Abyssinia, by which he gained some territory for Italy. But the important feature of this treaty was a clause differently interpreted by the two nations and which led to conflict between them later. The Italians claimed that Abyssinia pledged a definite obligation to be represented abroad by Italy while Menelik claimed it only gave Abyssinia the privilege of calling on Italy for such representation when she desired it.

Then Negus renounced the treaty and Crispien sent an army of 100,000 men to attack Abyssinia. This ended in a terrible slaughter of Italian troops at Adowa, March 1, 1896. It is this defeat that Mussolini claims to have avenged when a few weeks ago his armies dropped bombs on the helpless city. To this destruction he refers as "the glories of Adowa." The treaty which was dictated by Abyssinia after the Italian defeat in 1896 annulled the treaty of Uccial.

But Italy had not yet given up her idea of colonial expansion. In 1906 she joined with Great Britain and France in a characteristic pre-war treaty. The Tripartite agreement of London in which the three nations guaranteed "to maintain intact the integrity of Ethiopia," but also described the way in which it was to be divided up among them. Naturally Abyssinia protested this treaty.

Another attempt to gain colonial possessions was made by Italy in 1911. This time she was more successful. She cast her eyes again on the northern coast of Africa. After years of effort to secure it by diplomacy and negotiation she sent the Turkish government an ultimatum and landed troops in Tripoli, September, 1911. It required more than a year to pacify the wild tribes in Tripoli and Cyrenica and they were annexed to Italy under the generic name of Libya. At the same time she seized the group of islands in the Aegean sea known as the Dodecanese.

Bribed Into Treaties.

In 1915 Italy entered the Great war. She did not take this step with any spirit of idealism. She was bribed in secret treaties by Great Britain and France with promises of colonial concessions in Asia Minor and east Africa to abandon the triple alliance and enter on the side of the Allies. Italy has never since considered this promise as moral and diplomatic support for her ambitions in Abyssinia. She was, however, disappointed in the awards of the peace treaty of 1919. In 1922 Italy passed under the domination of the fascists with Mussolini as dictator.

The next year with Italy's support Abyssinia entered the League of Nations and promised to put an end to slavery. According to the slavery report to the League of Nations, 1935, she has made progress. But Mussolini announces that he intends to put an end to slavery in Abyssinia.

In 1925 an agreement was made between Great Britain and Italy regarding the free flow of the waters of the Blue and the White Nile in Sudan and Egypt. Britain asked for Italian support for a concession for a barrage on Lake Tana and a motor road between Lake Tana and Soudan. Italy in turn asked for British support for a concession for a railway connecting Eritria with Italian Somaliland passing west of Adis Ababa and for exclusive economic interests in West Ethiopia. Italy had proposed this treaty in 1919 but Great Britain had refused her support until 1925. Mussolini then reminded Great Britain of her promises for colonial concessions made in the secret treaties of 1915 and of Britain's efforts in 1919 to make good those promises. Again Abyssinia resented this agreement made without her consent and addressed a protest to the League of Nations, June 19, 1925. Italy's reply assured Emperor Haile Selassie that "there was nothing to justify apprehension on the part of Ethiopia."

Counted on Promises.

With these promises of friendship made so recently Italy prepared and launched an attack on this backward country, 1934-1935. Mussolini boldly proclaims that he will take by force this territory which will serve his needs.

To sum up at this point: Italy had gained in the scramble for colonies between 1885 and 1912 only the infertile lands of Eritria, and Italian Somaliland in East Africa, and Libya in North Africa with a few islands in the Aegean. Obviously her ambitions are much greater. Italy is heavily overpopulated and her population is increasing by about 400,000 every year. Mussolini urges the women of Italy to produce large families and in this he is supported by the Catholic church. Italy lacks coal and iron, raw materials for her industries and food for her people. She hopes that she will find these things in Abyssinia as well as an outlet for her overpopulation.

and he passes, and he's extremely liable to do an enormous amount of touchdown-hunting Thursday.

With Gray in the backfield in the Minnesota game were Bill Duncan at quarterback, Tommy Swanson at right halfback, and Elmer Kolberg at fullback. In the line were Woody Joslin and John Casserly, ends; Jim Miller and Don Fisher, tackles; Stan McLurg and Ed Strack, guards; and Ken Deming, center, Joslin, weighing upward of 200 pounds and exceptionally fast, will highlight the line personnel.

Senior Farewell.

On Nebraska's side of the fence will bristle an alignment featuring eight veterans in the starting lineup and two others as potential combatants. Dedicating the final game to the seniors, Coach Bible announced Monday that the initial rollcall would list Co-Captains Paul Morrison and Toby Eldridge, Ladas Hubka, Johnny Williams, Jimmy Heldt, Jerry LaNoue, Bernie Scherer, Henry Bauer, Harold Holmbeck, tackle, is suffering from an injured ankle, and may not be able to play in his final game in a Scarlet outfit. Bob Benson, Jerry LaNoue's left halfback pal, will alternate with the Wisner lad.

In prime condition with the exception of Holmbeck, the Husker squad has not been pampered in its near-week vacation after the trip to Pittsburgh. LaNoue, Sam Francis, and Lloyd Cardwell, who will be ousted from the starting booth by Co-captain Toby Eldridge, are raring to go again, and the Husker ball-toters promise to add a stirring dessert to turkey dinners with the crowd may have consumed. Fred Shirey will hold down right tackle in Holmbeck's absence, and Elmer Dohrmann will look over the top of Memorial stadium from right end. A sparkling performance against Jock Sutherland's Panthers earned the tall Staplehurst wingman the right to a starting post over Les McDonald.

Big Six Upsets.

With the Huskers out of the picture in the Big Six, great things have been happening along the five other fronts to determine who's going to occupy the place next to the Huskers which is quite an honor this year. While Oklahoma was staying out of entanglements over the week end to prepare for the Thanksgiving day mixup, Iowa State was springing one of the major upsets of the conference schedule in whipping Kansas, 21 to 12.

Meanwhile Missouri was managing to tie with Kansas State. However, it didn't help her standing in the league appreciably, for she's still down in the bottom of the house, with small chance of getting out. Just above her is Iowa State, with her schedule completed.

While these lesser powers were getting a taste of what it's like to conquer one of the more select members of the conference and rule the league for a day before being returned to the bottom half of the standings, they also threw the second-place position into a precarious situation.

Oklahoma, having done her bit in her five games, is rooting just below Nebraska, and finishes up with Oklahoma A. & M. at Norman Thursday. Meanwhile, Missouri will get another chance to do some dirty work, for if she loses to Kansas at Lawrence, the Jayhawks will have risen from third place into a tie with the Sooners for second. And then the Big Six records will have been closed for another year.

GOPHER COACH TO SEE HUSKER-BEAVER FRAY

Bierman Scouts Nebraska In Thanksgiving Day Battle.

Shades of Minnesota! Bernie Bierman's back in town!

The Cornhusker football team can relax, however, for the Minnesota gridiron professor isn't bringing his Gopher army with him, and he'll be watching from a comparatively safe position on the sidelines. After the 12-7 licking which the forces of the Minnesota head football coach plastered on Nebraska several weeks ago, and which most of Nebraska recalls as one of the supreme tragedies of the football world, the word Bierman is symbolic of undistilled peril. But Thursday his powder keg will be farther removed, for he will do no more than scout the Huskers as they meet Oregon State in the Thanksgiving Day finale of the season.

The Gophers finished their schedule last Saturday, and Bierman is already looking forward to next year's tussle with the Huskers. The foreman of the Minnesota football woods scouted the Thanksgiving Day battle between the Huskers and Beavers two years ago, when Coach Bible's lads administered a 22-0 thrashing on the Pacific coast eleven.

The Huskers are figured to win Thursday, but if the Gopher mentor's presence is necessary, Nebraska fandom is going to change its war cry from "Whip those Gophers!" to "Come on, Bierman!"

study which is essential to the author of such books as Mr. Stephens has composed the author has dipped deeply into Gaelic art and literature. He speaks and writes the tancient tongue with relative ease, and is an authority on the history of ancient Ireland.

Poems Unforgettable.

"It is a pity that all lovers of poetry cannot hear Stephens read his own poems. It is an experience, not soon to be forgotten, to hear him sing "Fifteen Acres;" to hear the feet of the goats in "The Goat Paths;" to listen to the beauties of "The End of the Road;" to hear him whisper "In the Cool of the Evening;" or to hear him prove in his poem about water that the English language above any other, does lend itself to onomatopoeia. Such is the feeling of authorities who have heard the Irish poet present his work in a manner which is almost inapproachable among the present literary moguls.

In view of the outstanding response offered the visitor at other universities in Europe as well as in America, Nebraska students have every reason to anticipate the height of cultural convocations this morning. Prof. J. O. Hertzler, chairman of the convocation committee implied.
