Limited Learning

Dr. James B. Conant, president of Harvard university, addressing the American Association of School Administrators, recently, again came out as a critic of the educational system of America.

Coincident with his report to the board of overseers at Harvard university, President Conant stressed the necessity of financing able students, who are ordinarily prevented from gaining a college education, thru more beneficent scholarships.

Continuing, Dr. Conant said, "At least 25 percent, and maybe 50 percent, of the students doing advanced work in American universities should be supplanted by more talented youths who can't afford to go to college."

He observed that 63 percent of those between the ages of 14 and 17 attend high school, but only 11 percent of those between the ages of 18 and 21 attend colleges and universities.

From every corner of its territory, Nebraska has generously sent ever increasing numbers of would-be students to its university. The time may come when Nebraska finds it desirable to limit its registration, when it will have to deny to some the privilege of seeking a higher education. Experts point to a declining birth rate and smaller secondary school populations to support the claim that natural trends will reduce the hordes which annually storm college admission windows. But under the present necessity of admitting almost all graduates of Nebraska high schools to the university, the fact will remain that classes will be overcrowded with students of lower caliber than advisable for an institution of higher learning. A step toward limiting admissions would be prompted by a desire to raise the standards as much as an effort to relieve crowded conditions.

Already standards and tuition rates have been raised for out of state students. When the university must curtail admissions from within the state, what shall be the criteria for admission? Shall tuition rates again be used as the device for effectively cutting down enrollment figures and possibly helping fill empty coffers?

In answering such a question, we would do well to refer again to the words of Dr. Conant. Dr. Conant pointed out that just as it is a mistake to provide a higher education of a specialized nature to those who are unable to make use of such training, so it is equally tragic to close the university doors to the "mentally active children" from lower economic groups. These promising youths who are virtually "debarred" by economic and geographic factors," Conant would ply with "generous subsidy... large scholarships or opportunities for earning sizable amounts of money." Yet, it is these young people who would be first and hardest hit by a rise in tuition rates.

Conant's stern declaration should be thrice heeded by any institution which must find a judicious method of restricting enrollment and is considering the possibility of a general tuition rise. If the principles of true democratic education are to be realized in practice, capacity for scholarship and not ability to pay should be the criterion for admission to an institution of higher education.

ORCHESTRA OFFERS ANNUAL RECITAL SATURDAY NIGHT

 tation on college life of this campus, according to Miss Claudia Moore, will be one of the most entertaining dances. In it the green freshman rushes to and fro, dancers attend a formal, class is held, athletics exist, and a graduation ceremony takes place.

Two members of Orchestra, Idella Iverson and Doris Rines, created their own version of zest into a dance. Their accompanist, Jane Goetz worked with them at the piano, and as a result, "Zest" is to be demonstrated.

"Lament" will be the first complete dance that Miss Moore has created alone, and is the true concert piece of the performance. It has three developments: Realization of loss, revolt against an unkind fate, and rebirth of faith. All 19 dancers will participate in this presentation.

Members Compose Music.
 Music for the recital was derived mainly from the more popular works of great masters, but much of it was composed by June Day, George Anna Theobald and Jane Goetz. All the dances were costumed and choreographed by members of Orchestra, and lighting was arranged by Mary Bird, Orval Zanzow, Sara Casebeer and Esther Davis.

Those who are participating are Eleanor Ackerman, Mary Jean Birk, Lois Blair, Bobette Colton, Enid Coltrane, Betty Jane Dutch, Margaret Eaton, Ruth Fulton, Helen Goodman, Idella Iverson, Martha Jackson, Eleanor Jones, Claudia Moore, Patricia Pope, Eileen Powell, Doris Rines, Kathryn Werner, Eleanor Willadsen and Selma Zveitel.

DRAMA CLUB SPONSORS DUAL FEATURE TONIGHT

Creative Activities Group Offers Plays, Dance on Saturday.

A dual program, consisting of three one act plays, and dancing during the remainder of the evening, will be presented by the dramatics club of the Creative Activities group at the student activities building on the ag campus Saturday night at 8 o'clock.

The character skit, directed by Otto Pfeiffer, and entitled "Pink and Patch" has for its scene a front yard of a mountain home, and the characters consist of the mountain twins, a boy and a girl, their mother, and a society patron. Vivian Brown has charge of "Tiger Claws," the mystery play, the plot centering around a vacant house and who should occupy it. Deciding whose brother he really is should bring laughs in the farce, "A Brotherly Person," directed by Jeanette Martin.

Admission to the duo type program brought back after its first successful venture last year, will be 25 cents a couple or 15 cents a person.

As I See It

By June Bierbower.
 Nebraska's Only Woman Sports Writer.
 Ki Aldrich, Texas Christian's ace center, is not, it seems, of P. B. K. caliber scholastically speaking. In fact, he's on the verge of ineligibility right now, so when a Fort Worth newspaper called him to ask whether or not he was a relative of one Sam Aldrich, a Michigan athlete, Ki replied, "If the Michigan guy's any good in his studies, he's no kin of mine."

West coast powers-that-be are rather puzzled and Santa Clarans are rather worried about the case of Jerry Ginney, 215 pound Santa Clara guard. Two years ago Jerry made his only appearance of the season when he reported to the referee in the Santa Clara-Portland game. The game ended before he could even line up with the team, though, and the question is, was he really in the game? If it ruled he actually was not, Santa Clara's guard worries for next season will be considerably lightened. However, if the decision goes the other way, he'll have had his three years of competition.

Glenn Cunningham estimates he has run 10,000 miles in training and racing. If put end to end that would make many more bunnies in this old world.

week, and Gene Litter of Mitchell continues to beat all comers in the quarter mile at Compton Junior college, one of U. S. C.'s most productive farms.

While speaking of native sons and that sort of thing, it's interesting to note that the 1938 Nebraska football team's starting lineup, if it remains intact, will be entirely made up of Nebraskans for the first time since 1932, we think. For the past several years, one or two outstates, as Warren De Bus, Bernie Scherer and Fred Shirey, have wandered here and taken a starting position. This year's team lists Mills, Schwartzkopf, Pfeif, Dohson and Plock from Lincoln High, Callihan and Kahler of Grand Island, Brock from Columbus, Dodd from Goshen, Grimm from Omaha, and Phelps from Exeter—everyone a whitespotter.
