The Art of Apple-Polishing

One of the most picturesque expressions in vogue among Nebraska students is that of "apple-polishing," a term which describes symbolically that smooth and outward sheen of manner by which a student recommends himself as especially desirable to the more or less absentminded eyes of the professor who might otherwise regard this particular pippin as merely an average sample of the box. The term makes its appearance particularly around this time of year when examinations loom in the foreground and students turn their footsteps toward the door of the professor's office more

The term "apple-polishing," in its original connotation, was applied to the practices of those students who believed that a failing grade could be changed for the better by currying favor with the professor. Flattery as to the manner of presentation, advantageous comparison of the work with that in other colleges, or instructors, intimations of personal or social charm in the instructor tacitly assumed in an invitation to lunch, tea, or dinner, or long conversations after class about football, or restaurants, or the next symphony are all regarded as methods which constitute, the fine art of "applepolishing." As a result of these practices, a sort of stigma has grown up around the term of "apple-polishing.

And fearing the stigma of "apple-polisher." many students have reached the place today where they condemn any contact with professors outside the classroom. Nothing is more absurd, for such students, while professing to had the time and perseverence to want a college education, are throwing away write you. I'm being rushed by a a main part of what it has to offer them. Althoeducators disagree upon the relative merits of one form of learning as opposed to another, they are of one mind on one thing-that social and mental contacts made during the four years in college, form perhaps the most influential single factor in student life.

That the mob has pinioned a fault detrimental to ideal relationship between faculty members and students and labeled it with so graphic a designation that it is constantly heard in every quarter does not prove the general acceptance or use of the practice. The strong and able humorously shrug shoulders at it, and proceed as if both concept and name were non-existent. The merely timid, unfortunately, haven't the nerve to establish personal relations. Always there are those who cannot grasp reality because they have set up a fetish of fear from which they back away into the flat plain of nothing venture, nothing have. But a real hardship is felt by the modest and retiring who fear any friendly overtures made to instructors will be misinterpreted. Thus the presence of an extremely small minority of those who deliberately seek to obtain by external gifts and beguilements the goods they will not earn by meritorious work, ironically enough, has created a class which oversensitive toepithets prefer to forego, in order to avoid even the appearance of bribery, a legitimate, natural, and in some cases enriching adventure in friendship.

While students should not monopolize professors' time when they have nothing of import to discuss with their instructors, students should realize that there are professors that it is a privilege to know, who are inspired themselves and have the faculty of inspiring others. These are the ones whohave started many a bewildered college student toward broader fields of interest and successful endeavor. .

If cultivating the friendship interest of these faculty members "apple-polishing," the same course would seem to be to encourage more of it.

To the Editor and Gordon Jones: When Mr. Jones spoke of the cut 'craze," he was right—it is just that . Of all the imbecilic, dizzy. downright asinine practices ever advocated on this campus, that is

To the editor

Our friend Mr. Jones is positivedances or program dances aren't a dances or program dances aren't a trend—they're a well established institution in practically every university except dear old Nebraska to Dop't limit your inquiries to the Dop't limit your inquiries to the Dop't limit your inquiries to make the program of ly behind hand. FINGERPRINTS ON THE UNION WALLS

Dear Gussie:

Well, dear, I'm still down here but have been so busy with things like Ivy day, Farmers Fair, and all those things that I just haven't sorority on the campus here. They're sure pouring it on. a funny thing, tho, that they told me so much about their Mortar Board two weeks ago, and now they don't even mention it. reminds me, I want to tell you about the spring election that's coming up. Wait for the next

-cc-The big thing on the campus right now is the fingerprinting that's going on over in the new Student Union. They're trying to get all the students and even members of the faculty to have their "paws recorded." This civil tingerprinting, Gussie, is getting to be quite the thing. I'm sure glad you aren't down here to get caught up on all that's going on. The way you are now, they can't prove that you were in Uncle Jeff's chicken coop that night. They can't prove a thing. -cc

But they don't want to incrimitate you with your fingerprints. They just want to get a record of you so that if you get caught in the thresher, they can tell who you were. Seriously, Gussie, it's very fine thing. But this fingerprinting business might mean something down here.

You see, most of the students wanted to have "pink elephants on the ceiling" in their new Student Union building, Since they can't have what other students on other campuses have, they decided that they would be satisfied with second best-"fin-gerprints on the wall." Soon as they get a record of some person's fingerprints, they can go around with their little glass. That way they can catch the members of this institution who were overly anxious to leave their souvenir record on the Union. The only trouble is, Gussie, that there are twice as many fingerprints on the wall as there ever be on the F. B.I. records from this campus.

It's a fine thing, Gussie, what this government can do. Mr. Hoover of the F. B. I. cannot be confused with that man who was president once. Mr. Hoover's or- one from the college of agricul- of Barney Oldfield, years ago, however. They first school of music. wanted to get fingerprint records have a set of numbers for each of music person living in this country. Think what fun that would be,

First, you could be number 1234567 in the Social Security. Your fingerprints could be recorded as number 48537208. Finally, your congressman could have a number for you like 47527935. Now if the government was smart, it could start its numbering process at one corner of the country and keep going. That would revolutionthe Postal Service and all your congressman would have to do to send you same of his free literature would be to adon envelope: Number dress 4567823. That would save a lot of time. Names and personalities are often boring anyway.

-CC And there's another thing. You like to put your money in those slot machines to well that I'm beginning to believe that you have the gambling spirit. Why not have a government lattery like they do in England. They would throw "pump-priming" They could give all the money away at one time the records back in place until the nucleus of the organization for next year. the coming year.

-CC-But getting back to this fingerprinting again, Gussie. They want everyone to dip their fingers in the ink and record their impressions. It's a real idea. They even offer the service to professors. Well, bye now.

yourself just another typographical error didn't you? BUT—in these words is the thought that's running through the minds of observers of the maelstrom of European events-that now is the time for all so-called champions of de mocracy to come to the aid of their so-called principles of liberty and wake from their roseate dream of a big, happy British-French-Ger-man-Italian family.

Mussolini is holding few illussions about the happy family business, Ironing out French and Italian differences would take at least a year, he says in one of his and Hitler's rainy day confabs. Conversations between Britain and Germany might take an even longer time. And right now Hitler can go ahead in Czechoslovakia exactly as he pleases as far as Mussolini is concerned. It duce hopes that Germany will be able to solve the problem "on her own strength." But he's going to bring diplomatic pressure to bear upon the Czechoslovak government to "reasonable" in meeting German demands.

And so now is definitely the time for all good Frenchmen and Englishmen to find out that authoritarianism is getting set another major stride in central Europe, and all the palavering and illosophizing are just so much palavering and philosophizing. Both countries thought agreement with Italy was a cinch with German troops menacing the Italian border. But they have failed to reckon the hold which the Rome-Berlin axis has on il duce. Ger many still represents Italy's best bet when it comes to getting the best deal out of an alliance, and all their concessions seem about to avail them nothing
