UNIVERSITY ASKS GRANT FROM PWA TO AID FINANCING

Work on Structure Starts This Summer Provided Funds Approved.

To be erected at the north end of Memorial stadium adjacent to the new athletic fields now nearing completion, a new athletic service building will be started late this summer if Washington authorities approve a PWA grant for the structure recently filed by the university.

The building will provide complete training quarters, equipment storage facilities, locker rooms, showers, team rooms, and classrooms for the major sports. The building will also include a small field house, 90 by 125 feet with 35 feet headroom, without posts and with a dirt floor where practice for the outdoor sports may be held in inclement weather.

A tunnel will connect the proposed building with the indoor track beneath the east stadium, but locker rooms in the south and north ends of the east tiers will be abandoned in favor of the new and more adequate quarters. According to present plans, the new building will be two stories high with the same sweeping windows and tower units that distinguish the main stadium, and in the center of the front will be constructed a huge, permanent clock and scoreboard. The first floor layout will include seven handball courts.

Repairs on the stadium included in the project will provide for the sealing of waterpockets that have developed and installing new seats to replace the old ones which have been splintered and worn by exposure to the elements and long usage. As funds may become available later, plans are also being developed for the completion of the stadium with an additional permanent seating capacity for some 15,000 spectators.

CORRECTION

An article appearing in the June 14 issue of the Nebraskan contained the statement that "tests of the new integrated physics-chemistry course devised by Prof. P. G. Johnson, now of Cornell, have indicated definitely that the combined course is as efficient as either of the specialized sciences." It should be noted that the actual work of integrating the two courses was done by Prof. Harold E. Wise, of the Teachers college high school, under the direction of Dr. G. W. Rosenlof.

Freddie Schlott, Beta at Iowa State, and his college rhythm band will feature Pla-Mor's 4th of July dance program. The entire band is composed of fraternity men.
