

Mingling with Marg

The rain comes to warn us of what might happen Ivy Day...and also to send unprepared campusites scurrying for cover—such as the Drug or Grill...and at the Grill they find a "Fun on the Farm" sundae—a leader-up to the Farmer's Fair...and all around us everywhere we see beards and beards which remind us that most of the kiddies will be journeying to the Omaha Golden Spike Celebration...F'rinstance, there'll be Harriet Wood, AXID, and Dick Lynn, and a bunch of Phi Delt's and Beta's and their dates...and since there are no parties here this week end, most of the kiddies will spend their time and stuff on movies and dancing to Orrin Tucker on Friday night...and from there to take some of the little "newsies" of the day, we might mention the sudden no-more-go-steady of Delta Gamma Marjorie King and basketball ace Al Werner...might also mention the huge fun that Delt Bart Berg has been having since he has no more scholastic troubles—a certain Miss Rice is the gal he dates...and Jean Fisher doesn't anticipate this week end so happily, for DU Wade Raser will be in South Carolina for Pershing Rifle inspection trip...and the DU's, in their present social status, are welcoming any and all bids to parties thruout the year...and the Delta Gamma freshmen "took it on the lamb" yesterday day afternoon with a certain very valuable literary piece...and the Tassels are uniformed again today to remind us of the Rubinoff concert to cap the climax of Ivy Day excitement...all in a joking way was the aforementioned candy-passing of Kappa Delt Gail Ferguson and Fiji Carl Olenberger—just a little deal fixed up by the sisters...

Kick in pants gave Rubinoff his first lift toward fame

Poets may write about the foot prints on the sands of time, but another man, Rubinoff, the master of the violin, who will play here in concert May 4, delights in talking about the foot print that gave him his start to fame. The imprint that a "flat foot" left on the rear of the violinist's anatomy.

Rubinoff, was a newspaper boy when the incident occurred. Sensing the opportunities of larger sales at railroad stations, he began to sell his papers on the station platform, that is, until the railroad cop's foot found its mark. "That," the fiddler said, "was the first upward feeling I ever experienced." Invents portable violin.

Probably more noted as a violinist than as a composer, Dave Rubinoff can also be called an inventor. He invented a portable violin that folds into an 18 inch leather case and may be slung, camera fashion over the shoulder. When all "stretched out" the instrument is a standard size violin which should not be slung across the shoulder.

His invention carries a collapsible bow string, ideal for vacation trips. In addition, he says, it has a true tone. "Of course," said the violinist, "maybe it isn't as good as my Stradivarius, but it is convenient for vacation trips and mountain climbing.

General Electric interviews here

Personnel head seeks men for training course

M. L. Frederick, personal manager of General Electric will interview seniors of the Bizad college today and tomorrow, for entrance into a three year pre-employment training course offered by his company.

Receiving a good salary with chances of speedy promotion, chosen applicants will study business and corporation finance as well as the structure of the General Electric corporation thru company instructors at their Schnectedy factory.

Those eligible for entrance include liberal arts graduates with no specialized training, business college graduates interested in accounting or marketing, engineers who wish to supplement their studies with business experience, and commercial school graduates trained in secretarial science.

Seniors who wish to interview Mr. Frederick should register with T. T. Bullock, chairman of the placement committee this morning. Interviews by the Goodyear rubber company representative will take place tomorrow.

Profs--

The home culture is furnished by the mother, who has some social consciousness and belongs to the local women's club."

With this background, the prodigy goes to school, has various jobs washing dishes, etc., becomes a reader, is impressed by the security of a teaching job and the three month summer vacation, gets a fellowship, and subsequently an instructorship.

He now begins to believe in the old hokum about teaching being the noblest of professions, service to humanity, creating the citizens of tomorrow. He takes the old theories and injects new refinements into them, thus "personalizing" his teaching.

He's respected enough now so that he marries one of the older professor's daughters and is "in," so he settles down into a comfortable reiteration of old principles, old traditions, old jokes. He ventures into the world rarely, and when he does, returns to the campus baffled by the curious practices of businessmen. Their formulas are not described in any textbooks, and he is awed by his classmates who are "doing big things in industry," according to his alumni journal. He begins to get a bit discontent and a bit ambitious.

Publishes book.

He hints to the next book salesman that visits him about "the manuscript I am working on" and eventually has a book published. He tries again, with better or worse success, and becomes in demand as a dinner speaker. He gets his big chance when he speaks at a meeting of business men when he attacks business principles in general and is rewarded by an offer of a job by one of the executives who stops him after his speech.

He gets leave of absence, but soon returns to the campus with a generous fee, where, you may be sure, he will be hailed as the big shot of the campus. Maybe the next dean. But he will be off again soon. His new prestige gives him a fulcrum with which to pry his way back into business or government. He flits back and forth from business to teaching until the chancellor gets insistent that he make up his mind. But he is happy, for he knows that he is a "modern professor."

Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia initiates seven members

Seven men were initiated into Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia, professional music fraternity in induction ceremonies held last night in the Union. The new initiates are Don Hartman, Leonard Peltier, Donald E. Anderson, Frank Walters, Gregory Meyer, Jack Thompson and Warren Hammel. Informal initiation for the neophytes was held Monday evening.

Gaba talks at seminar

Another in the series of bi-weekly mathematics seminars will be held this afternoon at 2 o'clock when Professor M. G. Gaba, of the mathematics department speaks on "Distance Geometries." The meeting will be held in room 302 of Mechanical Arts.
