Just to Explain It All

(Into our offices yesterday wandered our old friend, Gussie Lor-kins, whom we hadn't seen for a long time. Gussie was here two years ago doing a bit of writing now and then. Now he's back, this time to get an education. Altho his family finances aren't too stable, Gussie pledged a fraternity this fall and has vowed to keep up with the best of them as long "as dad's dough holds out." All in a dither, Gussie wanted to write a note home explaining all. It follows:

Dear Dad:

Seems almost impossible that I've been down here more than a month. But I am fine. In my last letter I didn't tell you that I joined one of these here frats. Didn't want to worry you about such small matters. There's 23 of them societies down here and they all wanted me but I held out for the best deal. I'll bet they thought I was as stubborn as old "Bossy" just before she had her last calf.

But what I'm writing about to you now is this scholarship report or something that they're printing in today's paper. Don't worry about it. This here fraternity I'm in is pretty well down the list but that doesn't mean much. You see down here, it isn't like packing eggs the way we do up there. The bad ones down here aren't necessarily on the bottom.

Quite a bit's been said down here today about the averages of most of these here frats (they call them Greek houses for slang) being below the all-student average, but that ain't nothing against fraternities. You see a frat's something more than just a place to eat, sleep and study. Being a frat man is much better than being a barb (that's what they call them guys who ain't in any frat).

You see in a frat, they tell you how to study and get good grades. We don't have to spend three hours studying for a one hour course, because we have frat files and some of the fellas know the teachers. The fellas told me before I pledged that we would have some kind of a study table where everybody that was a freshman had to study. They decided against that, I guess though, when Monday night meeting interfered and everyone had some other meeting to go to every other

Scrap Irony

Chris Peterson

My uncle was married yesterday. I told him that the best man at the wedding was the one who wasn't getting married. He didn't take heed.

He claims that he didn't know what real happiness was until he got married. Now it's too late!

I feel sorry for him. He used to enjoy a good drink occasionally. Now, he doesn't dare spend money for liquor. His wife makes him account for every cent.

Perhaps it is all for his own good. He used to get pretty bad. One night, after usual dissipation, I saw him on the sidewalk in front of his home. All of a sudden he stirred and said, "I'll climb this wall if it takes me all night." Oh well.

Quite a fellow. Went to barber college once but they expelled him after he had been there a couple of weeks. He was putting hair restorer in the shaving cream.

Well, I don't suppose that he'll be around much longer. He took a job in a dynamite factory the other day so he would quit smoking.

night. Then, of course, we don't ignore the social life.

I got a new hat cause everyone down here dresses like the banker's son over at Passion Center. On Friday's, we have hour dances. Saturday morning we have to scrub the house. In the afternoon, there are tea dances or football games or something. Saturday night is when we date. Sunday morning we sleep and that afternoon is when a lot of the other fellas have dates so I do too. Sunday night we go to bed early.

So you can see how awful it must be not to be in a frat. Like one of the fellas said: Think of the disadvantage these other guys must suffer because they get so bored all they can do is study.

Well, anyway, don't worry. There's a lot of reasons why some of the fraternities are near the top.

Yours,
Gussie

P. S. Can you send me another fifty by the end of the week?
