

Extension division publishes directory

The forty-fourth Nebraska educational directory has been published by the extension division as the current issue of its weekly, University of Nebraska News. It contains the names of the county superintendents and of the superintendents and teachers in all the schools in the state, besides data about salaries, enrollment, and attendance. The directory was developed co-operatively by Superintendent C. W. Taylor of the state department of public instruction and A. A. Reed, director of the university extension division.

Since then, the Cornhuskers have bagged 33 victories. Kansas has nine to her credit; three games have been ties. Not since 1916, when a group of young gentlemen from Lawrence turned back the Scarlet 7-3, have the Kansans won a game from Nebraska. In 1937 they managed to eke out a 13-13 deadlock with the Cornhuskers. After a drab October showing last year, the Jones boys cut loose to beat Kansas, 16-7.

Jamboree to fete novelty dances

The Virginia reel, the old square dance and novelty numbers will be the highlights on the recreational program of the ag college "Jolly Time Jamboree" to be held tonight in the student activities building. Novices will have the opportunity to receive instruction in the old-fashioned dances from couples who have practiced them. Students attending the event will also have a chance to participate in a wide variety of games, including ping pong and other table games. Miss Ruthalee Holloway will direct the musical games at the party, which will start at 8:30. The jamboree is open to all university students.

Biff Jones' Cornhuskers and Gwinn Henry's Jayhawkers meet for the forty-sixth time when the Kansans come to memorial stadium tomorrow for their Armistice day battle. This will be the first meeting between the two teams with Henry chaperoning the Kansas lads to Lincoln. Highly respected in Nebraska football circles, Mr. Henry's shortage of material and wins will not lead anyone to believe that this will be a breather after last Saturday's defeat at the hands of the Mizzou Tiger. Most ancient rival of the Scarlet and the Cream, the Jayhawkers first faced Nebraska in 1892.

Seeing is believing—he had bats in the belfry

By Paul Svoboda.
The crowd stood waiting in the misty morn. All eyes were fixed upon the blood stained guillotine. A man, crazy they say, walked up the platform prodded by a bayonet just above the floating rib. His shaven head was laid on the block. Directly above him the knife glistened in the early dawn ready to complete its deadly mission.

The crowd shifted nervously as the executioner made his way to the trip that carried in itself the question of life or death. His hand moved. The blade sped downward. A cracking, swishing noise filled the enclosure. The head did not roll into the basket! Something was wrong! The crowd moved forward and stared horrified at the sight. The bloody knife had split the shaven head exactly in two.

It was true! The man was crazy! And there lay two bats evidently undisturbed. "Bats in the belfry, bats in the belfry," whispered the luckless members of the audience. This numbered crowd were to be intruders in one of the strangest conversations yet known to man.

They began talking. If you know psychology you'll understand them.
One Bat: Good morning, bat. How are you this morning?
Two Bat: Clear as a bell. I woke up with the sound of the gong.
One Bat: Are you going straitium to work or will you wait for the 9 o'clock chimes?
Two Bat: Cerrebellumly. I must catch the thala-bus or I'll be late for work again. The boss practically "rung" my socks off the last time I was late.
One Bat: Don't hurry. We can both go on the hypothala-bus that leaves ten minutes later. Give me the cortex and I'll plug in the toaster. Somes-thesia (pronounced some of these) banana's will go good with your Wheaties.
Two Bat: I think I'll fry that central Fish-ure. There's no use letting it go to waste.
One Bat: Pull the cortex! The toast is burning. What the B(h)ell's wrong with you.
Two Bat: Your Batty. That's only the steam from the teapot.
One Bat: M'gosh, look what time it is! We'll be late if we don't hurry.
Two Bat: Gather your senses (ories). I can't hear the motor, (nerves).
One Bat: Oh Yea. There goes

the hypothala-bus. We're late again.
Two Bat: No use going to work today. Let's go see Sylvius. Maybe we can go fish-uring or something.
One Bat: Not me. I'm going to work if I have to "fly."
