Editorially Speaking

Do You Study on Sunday?

Sunday is one of the favored days in the student's calendar set aside, in part at least, for the purpose of serious study. There are two reasons for this: (1) procrastination brought on by parties and social functions during the week-end force study on Sunday as a last resort, and (2) the large percentage of students who work in downtown establishments find Sunday the only day to catch up on their work.

For these reasons, the UNIVERSITY LIBRARY SHOULD BE OPEN ON SUNDAY.

A survey of student opinion appearing in our Inquiring Reporter column today verifies this contention.

Students taking freshmen lecture and economics are especially eager to be able to spend a few hours in the library on Sunday afternoons.

According to Magnus Kristoffersen, head librarian at the city library, a large number of students use the facilities there every Sunday. "We can notice a great increase about the time of examinations and when term papers are due," he says.

IS THERE ANY REASON WHY OUR OWN LIBRARY, WHERE BOOKS NEEDED ARE ON RESERVE, SHOULD NOT BE OPEN TO THOSE STUDENTS FROM 2 UNTIL 5 ON SUNDAY?

In Our Student Pulse Columns

The DAILY has received scores of letters for its Student Pulse columns this year. Most of them, however, are unsigned. Altho we invite intelligent comment, it is absolutely against our policy to publish an article which is submitted without the name of its author. The DAILY will, however, refrain from using the writer's name if desired.

A letter recently received in the office, had this nicely phrased "P. S.": I would attach my name to the article but being new to this institution, I do not know what becomes of such letters after they are submitted.

Let it be said here and now that these articles reach only the hands of our editors. To those who have submitted letters in the past weeks with label signatures such as "A New Stew-dent," "A Friend of the Band," "An Interested Student," and so forth, reveal your names and we'll be more than glad to print your views.

DuTeau--

Teau. It is a recognized necessity, one of the most valuable tools. Public speaking has become Du Teau's hobby. While living in St. Joseph, Mo., he organized and conducted a large class in public speaking. Now in Lincoln, university students, even members of the football team, come to him for advice.

"No matter what the native ability of a man may be; no matter how fine his voice, how alert his mind, or how sensitive his reactions to people, he can gain the poise, the ease, the self possession and the ability to speak convincingly and effectively before an audience only through practice and experience," says the alumni secretary.

"Good speakers are not born. But good speakers can be made, and anyone who claims a person cannot learn to become a speaker unless he has been born with a fine voice and all the other assets, is either excusing himself for his own fears and inability, or unwittingly expressing his vanity over his ability to speak, says Du Teau.

"There are not tricks to public speaking which can be learned over night," he points out. "It takes time to learn good enunciation, correct pronunciation, effective delivery, and the other phases of the art.

But one thing is certain today—public speaking pays 100 percent dividends. It is one study that not only develops the individual but enlarges his world, his personality and his opportunities.

In delivering a speech in rehearsal it is advisable to look at yourself in the mirror, he says. See if you express in appearance what you are expressing in words.

"Keep your chin up, not too high, but high enough to show that you are looking straight at the world. Stand erect. Face the audience with a smile, and do not be in a great rush to get started. Know when to stop, and never learn to take an assignment lightly because it calls you before a small audience. Accept criticism gracefully and praise modestly.

"Speak on something you know about; above all have your subject matter in mind, and a sincere enthusiasm for the thing you're talking about."

sons, I believe, would rather get their Monday's assignments on Sunday than on Saturday. However I don't use the library much so it doesn't bother me one way or the other.

Roland Shirley, bizad, sophomore. Positively, I believe that it is about the only time that most of us have for reference work. Saturday is usually spent in relaxation and seclusion from routine academic work. If it is open on that day it should be open on Sunday.

I guess it would be worthwhile for it to open on Sunday. Why not close it on Saturday and open it on Sunday?

Mary Bullock, teachers sophomore.

Yes, of course, I think Sunday is the most logical day to study even if most of us don't.

Sure. The city library is so why isn't the university? When I have to get references on Sunday I have to go to the city library where most of them are not complete.

Pat Herminghaus, arts and sciences freshman.

Isn't it open on Sunday? It should be if it isn't. I am sure that all freshmen could use it very advantageously for freshmen lecture which requires a lot of reference work.

Ephram Gershater, arts and science freshman.

I think so. Obviously a great many people have to study on Sunday and naturally a part of this work must be done in the library, mainly in the reference room. If it is open on Saturday why not on the Sabbath?

Jack Stone, engineering senior.

Yes, I don't know why, but I still think it's a good idea. Some of the more tied down students could use it for an excuse to get a breath of the night air if you know what I mean.

Howard Marshall, bizad junior.

I have to do a lot of work in the library and Sunday would be a good day to do it. All my courses require considerable extra reading and most of the time I go to the city library. I think it should at least be open in the afternoon.

Connie Brunbaugh, teachers freshman.

It would help me to have it open on Sunday afternoon. In that way I could get my work all done and have the evening to spend at a cinema. As it is I don't do anything on Sunday afternoon and I still go out in the evening.
