I stood and watched a college senior try to peel an orange the other day. He made an awful mess of the endeavor. I finally concluded that no man was truly educated until he knew how to skin an orange. Here are a few accepted methods.

'Secretarial careers are opening up'

Governmental director encourages women wanting clerical jobs

Opportunities for career service for women are increasing constantly, a study of government compiled figures on employment of women in clerical positions reveals, according to Mrs. Adria C. Beaver, director of studies of the Washington school for secretaries.

United States census figures are cited by Mrs. Beaver to show that from 1920 to 1930, the period when office machinery and equipment was coming into general use, the number of clerical workers increased by nearly 30 percent while the total population of the country increased only about 16 percent.

Even more startling figures cover the period from 1900 to 1930, when the population gained about 61 percent with the number of clerical workers increasing by more than 300 percent.

They used to be men.

An interesting sidelight on the particular appeal of office work to women as a career is shown by the percentage of stenographers and typists who were women in 1870 as contrasted by the percentage in 1930. Slightly less than 5 percent of the 1870 stenographers were women, while in 1930 the percentage was somewhat over 95.

Based on government statistics, Mrs. Beaver, in a bulletin prepared for students of the school in Washington and the companion school in New York, predicts that these opportunities will continue to expand with the development and improvement of office machinery.

For, according to the figures, the greatest expansion in office careers for women as well as men has occurred during the period when the modern office equipment was being invented and coming into general use.

Mrs. Beaver also finds as a result of her survey that the improved equipment of offices has attracted in recent years a higher type of employe. This improved condition of the worker, she explained, is unquestionably due to the persons of higher education who are being attracted to office work.

When it comes to jewelry, well-dressed women pick sentimental rings, lockets

By Bette Rathburn.

Pearls ranging from one dainty strand to any number are still very popular for formal wear and look stunning with most any color or style of dress. Something different in necklaces is a five strand row of cleverly arranged cascading pearls dropping from two golden chains, which quiver with your every movement.

Crested rings, bracelets and lockets, which have sentimental as well as ornamental value, will be worn with formals this year as usual.

And for the new heavier type of jewelry—Gold outshines all else. Wilma Comstock DG adorns her simple maroon velvet formal with a heavy elaborate gold necklace in the center of which is a large tourquoise stone.

Pear shaped rhinestones.

A necklace of brilliant rhinestones sets off a strapless white evening gown. Tiny glittering pear shaped rhinestones, beautifully arranged in four rows and dangling from the smallest of silver chains. With this is a bracelet to match.

For the new up-sweep in coiffures, mademoiselle may wear a rhinestone hair clip of Lillies of the Valley to sweep the curls up from the temple.

Back to 'baby aprons.'

For the sophisticated black formal, a gilt bib of many chains and a cuff of chains for the wrist add the finishing touch.

Another charming necklace is one of enameled gilt with jade and onyx drops down the front.

Mary Louise Simpson, Pi Phi pledge, wears a wide, heavy necklace of amber stones inlaid in gold. The center is a cluster of smaller stones grouped in a circle with a background of gold.

Alpha Chi Marilynn Harper goes a-glitter with a blue rhinestones of tiny squares arranged in one row—with bracelet to match. The necklace looks stunning with her dark blue velveteen formal.

Jane Shire has a novel necklace consisting of a tiny procelain in pansy with a small diamond in the center, with the locket part attached to a tiny black velvet ribbon.
