Commencement-

(Continued from page 1.) states are the rulers of the future. The power states have found something, they assert, a satisfaction for the many that comes from a sense of fusion. Free institutions are not so much thrown overboard as abandoned willingly, apparently with enthusiasm. Well, this has happened many times in human history. But the democratic spirit did return....It always will, because man as a human being will yearn for freedom,"

To maintain the democratic way, Dykstra urged that we must develop a positive social program for economic stability and security including full employment, create a sounder legislative organization and a better public administration, destroy war, renew our faith in human values and in the possibilities of abundance through scientific technique, and validate our belief in the assumptions of democracy and safeguard civil rights for all lest we lose them for all.

Honor Doctors of Law.

Following the commencement address, five honorary degrees were conferred upon distinguished alumni of the university. Degrees of Doctor of Laws were presented Frederick Clements, Gladys Dick, Alvin Johnson, Joel Stebbins and Alexander Stoddard.

Frederic Edward Clements, Ph.D., 1898, Santa Barbara, Calif., is the noted botanist in charge of ecological research at the Carnegie Institute, active investigator and writer, and international figure in the field of plant ecology.
