The university YMCA

Thursday evening, the university YMCA opened its campaign for funds among city campus students by entertaining representatives from fraternities and barb houses at a "kickoff" dinner. $48.50 represented the increase in YMCA funds at the conclusion of that dinner.

The YMCA, almost entirely a barb organization, does not limit its membership to barb men. Fraternity men are invited and welcomed to partake of YM activities, in fact a fraternity man holds one of the most influential offices in the organization.

Guided by Mr. C. D. Hayes, university YMCA general secretary, this group can do more good socially than any other organization on this campus if students will get behind it and push. The group cannot operate without money, and the amounts donated to it by organized houses and other groups are well spent, altho unreasonably puny.

Without the YMCA on this campus, or any other university campus for that matter, hundreds of students would be deprived of all opportunity to make social contacts, to enjoy university life in a fuller measure.

The goal of the YM drive is something like $1600, a paltry sum considering the potential goodness that the entire campus might derive from Y work. Faculty contributions leave the student-solicited share of the fund relatively small, and one which should be raised very easily. Yet they have a difficult time reaching its goal.

Fraternities and sororities, campus activity groups like Corn Cobs, Innoents, Mortar Boards, Kosmet Klub, the barb council, the Student Council would do themselves justice if they contributed nominal sums to the Y campaign. Some of them do contribute and set a good example which the others ought to follow.

Once again, it's the old line about not seeing a show this week, or bumming your cigarettes for a while as far as individual students are concerned. Most students won't miss the few cents they should give, however, even in the short run.

Let's all push together and make this a real all-university campaign! The YMCA deserves your contribution and its thanks will be more sincere and honest than those of the recipients of most of your dollars.

Barbs generally approve new paper but offer sharp criticism

By Paul Dinnis.

To determine the opinion of barb students as to their new publication, The Barb, a cross section of affiliated students was polled last week by the DAILY NEBRASKAN.

Representative opinions from five men and five women show more general approval than disapproval of the new publication.

Beth Howley, arts senior: The paper is a fine thing. Everything in it concerns barbs. Barbs will be attracted by it to participate in activities.

Janet Harris, teachers senior: I think The Barb will prove itself worthy by bringing unaffiliated students into closer contact.

Bob Wallin, bizad junior: I think it is about time there was a paper on the campus that represents barbs. It should strengthen the barb organization.

Tom McCandless, bizad junior: I think that there should be no separation between Barbs and Greeks on the campus. The paper separates them. What there should be is a nonpartisan paper.

Melvin Gottschalg, bizad junior: I don't think the paper will be successful because the current news from day to day can't appear in it, and that is what students are interested in. Most of the contents of the paper are in the form of announcements which could be printed in the DAILY NEBRASKAN.

Ross Blythe, engineering college freshman: As for giving facts, it is okay. It lacks sparkle and is a dead paper. It didn't impress me.

Ray Smith, arts sophomore: Much better than last year's.

Shirley Russell, engineers junior: Represents a good idea. Will do a lot to bring barbs together.

Elizabeth Clark, teachers junior: The publication of campus news should officially be left to the official campus paper, the DAILY NEBRASKAN. If a strictly barb paper is to exist, it should contain only announcements concerning barb activities.

Geraldine Webber, teachers sophomore: The paper will serve a good purpose. It could be a larger paper. More pictures of smaller size would be an improvement.

Morton—

approximately 75,000 letters written by such notables as President and Mrs. Cleveland, Theodore Roosevelt, Mark Twain, William Randolph Hearst, William Jennings Bryan, Stuyvesant Fish, James Gordon Bennett, Bliss Perry, and Marshall Field. Among the famous Nebraska signatures in the collection are A. J. Sawyer, Victor Rosewater, Dr. A. E. Sheldon, Chancellor Canfield, Dr. C. E. Bessey, and Governors Silas A. Holcomb, W. A. Richardson, and James E. Boyd.

An autographed picture of Brigham Young is contained in one of three photograph albums. Three books contain records of Morton's activities as secretary of the Nebraska territory, and the collection includes his original commission for the position signed by President James Buchanan and Secretary of State Lewis Cass on June 14, 1858.

Other material in the collection includes 58 books containing copies of J. Sterling Morton's letters; 2 books of his father's letters; 3 bound volumes of his official correspondence as secretary of agriculture; 30 journals of information about Arbor Lodge; 134 volumes of pamphlets, many printed in the early 19th century and covering a wide range of subjects; old and rare volumes of western Americana; 30 personal diaries of Morton; 44 scrapbooks of newspaper clippings; a set of Nebraska territorial laws and territorial house and council proceedings; an incomplete set of state laws, state house and senate journals; miscellaneous works on politics, history, and economics; loose copies of the Conservative, weekly newspaper published by Morton from 1898 to 1902.

"Mr. Morton took an active and important part in the development of the state and territory, and the meticulousness with which he preserved the record of his activities makes the collection one which should prove very valuable as a source of early western and Nebraska history," states Dr. R. A. Miller, director of university libraries.

THE FALL

From the mails this morn:

My Son:

Six down hours. Why?

Your father.

P. S. Please try to remember you are not drawing from the U. S. mint on your checking account.

Into the mails this morn:

Dear Father:

To say that it is Fall is rather a familiar gall and is likely to be taken seriously by anyone living nearously. Locally, Fall is associated with an unusual amount of average rainfall which is very painful. And there are clods and gobbets, and chunks and masses, and lots of mud that is unconditionally guaranteed to do no one any good. In addition there have been pink eyes and mumps leading to dark glasses and veterinarians all causing the infirmity to be filled three and four deep with people who won't go to sleep but sit around and play bridge and wish for more comic papers and regard the nurses curiously though by no means injuriously. All of which causes the Health Center to take to drink and backgammon and drugs or wrapping themselves in bear rugs, and doubt their own sanity and divinity. Nonetheless, we are resolved that it is fall add nothing else at all because in spite of mud and rain and diseases and weather that freezes I am having more trouble studying than usual which is a good hawl besides proving that it is fall. Therefore, I toss aside assorted books and ring any welkings I can get my hands on, meanwhile keeping an eye cocked for nymphs dancing in the woods with or without fans. In keeping with the spirit of the season, I have stopped doing.

Another six weeks like this one and I shall be out of school. But what care I. I have long looked forward to the time when you and I shall own your business.

Your Son.

Dear Editor . . .

29 October, 1940

Editor, DAILY NEBRASKAN
Lincoln, Nebraska

Dear Sir:

In a recent issue of the DAILY NEBRASKAN there appeared on the editorial page an unsigned editorial representing one side of an obviously partisan controversy, namely, the third term. I assume that the opinion therein expressed is the opinion of the editor.

It is possible, I suppose, that it is good taste in journalism to represent one side of a partisan dispute and to thereby pass judgment on the respective merits of that controversy. But for a college publication of the type of the DAILY NEBRASKAN to pursue such a partisan policy is grossly unfair.

After admitting the existence of an important political issue by commenting on the third term, the editorial takes the privilege of drawing a conclusion without presenting both sides of question. The controversy is brushed aside lightly as being of no seriousness, and the assertion is made that the notoriety surrounding the controversy is the work of alarmists. I repeat, to pursue such a policy is grossly unfair.

If the editor of the DAILY NEBRASKAN wishes to accept the word of Mr. Roosevelt on the third term, on the basis of his past record for keeping his word on other matters, that is a personal affair; every man is entitled to full right of gullibility. But the editor is in a responsible position. He should not abuse that position by publishing one side of an obviously partisan controversy, especially when the editorial is embellished by inadequate and poorly reasoned arguments.

If the editor of the DAILY NEBRASKAN desires a critical examination of the third term controversy, there is ample material and talent available for representing the other side of the question. And in the interests of fairness, both sides of the issue should be presented. For this reason I suggest that the DAILY NEBRASKAN was grossly unfair in presenting the third term issue in the manner mentioned above, and I protest against such unfairness.

Respectfully,

CURRIN SHIELDS.

The campaign issues are presented squarely in news columns. The editor's column is his own. What he believes best, he advocates. Can that be any more plainly stated? RESPECTFULLY, Ed.
