Sorensen addresses Gauls on qualifications of lawyer; was editor of Daily

C. A. Sorensen, prominent Lincoln lawyer, addressed the Gauls, Lincoln men's club, last week on qualifications of lawyers. Sorensen was attorney general of Nebraska from 1929 to 1933, and while at the university was a member of the varsity debate team and editor of the DAILY NEBRASKAN.

Stating six qualities a lawyer must have "absolute integrity, a capacity for hard work, truthfulness, loyalty to client, ability to assume public responsibility, ability to be a good sport. Sorensen predicted that he could tell a good lawyer by his desk. If the desk was orderly, he commented it bespoke an orderly mind.

on such a matter, it was merely a formality for it to inspect the protest, and then to refer it to the judiciary committee. The elections committee had no authority to—nor did it—recommend any action for the judiciary committee to take on the matter. This is written to clear up the misunderstanding that has arisen from the story as it appeared in the DAILY—I hope that this explanation of the case will clarify matters, and help to restore a feeling of unity among those concerned, especially on the ag campus.

Sincerely,
DALE THEOBALD,
Co-chairman, Elections

Well, don't let anybody beat your rugs for you, Blockhouse, ha ha. . . .

Edgar Blattz.

It's a good idea to have a letter of recommendation when you're in quest of a job. A typical letter of this type follows:

To Whom it May Concern:
The bearer of this letter, Butch O'Shaughnessy, worked for me two weeks and never once during that time did I find him drunk or disorderly or shooting craps with the janitor. Maybe this was because he never showed up for work until the day I fired him.

I feel sure that you will find this man to be a perfect model of sloppiness, bad habits, undependability, and utter futility. Best of luck if you hire him!

Thankfully,
F. Periwinkle Twirpp.
