Good Housekeeping... Daily conduct college women opinion survey

Through the cooperation of the DAILY staff, Good Housekeeping has recently conducted a survey of college women's opinions on various and sundry subjects.

In the first place such questions as, "Do you want to be raising babies or holding down a good job, or both, a year after graduation?" were asked. "How do you feel about the draft?" and "What part should women play in national defense?" are other examples.

It also asks questions concerning clothes and the amount spent on them. Use of cosmetics pro or con is still another section of this booklet which should reveal to Good Housekeeping Institute some startling news. Results of the survey will be sent to the DAILY NEBRASKAN and published in Good Housekeeping.

Blackest assumption. "Then for a moment," he stated, "let us take the very blackest of all assumptions. Let us assume the United States enters this war and that we, the allies, are defeated. If such were to happen, then the only thing we would have to depend upon for our survival— for making our way in a new order— would be our education."

Curtiss, comparing present-day college life with that of former times, said that "we need look back only three years to see that time the student was spending here at the university, he spent in preparing for a lifetime job."

As a result, the college student of today diligently applied himself to his work, he said. "Today, however, the average college student has nothing to contemplate in the next few years but joining the armed forces of the United States, either as a draftee or a soldier."

Chains form processional

In a procession made colorful by their pastel and white dresses, coeds formed the Ivy and Daisy chains which began the ceremonies leading to the crowning of the Queen of the May. Chanting the traditional Ivy Day song, "We Who Bear the Ivy," they bordered the walk leading to the throne.

National survey shows... Fraternity men's scholarship higher than independents

... over entire country

For the tenth consecutive year national and local fraternities. A very small percentage of schools with fraternities do not make scholastic reports available. Taking the institutions as a whole, there has been marked improvement throughout the eastern half of the country, but 60 percent of the institutions west of the Mississippi lost ground, according to the report. The same trends were found in both endowed and state institutions, and in both types was evidence that fraternity chapters respond definitely to scholastic leadership directed toward better scholarship. The voluntary imposition by the fraternities of a higher initiation requirement than the university demanded brought Ohio State fraternities above the all men's average for the first time in recent years.
