In publication offices . . .

Maniac atmosphere prevails as semester is nearing end

Do you have coffee nerves? Do you become excited at the mere thought of a madhouse? Do you avoid maniacs? If so don't venture to the Union basement for there you will find a miniature insane asylum, penal institution, and a fair smattering of normal collegians. In other words the offices of the Cornhusker, Flash, and Daily are located there.

"Back in the corner" is the Cornhusker office with its staff and ever present sorority and fraternity freshman. Bob Aden busy with being editor, Avery Forke worrying about accounts (probably English, too), Stewie Stewart and Shirley Russell hurrying about collecting material for a yearbook, compose the paid staff.

In this madhouse atmosphere, it's no wonder many of the staff swear by aspirins.

The doing in the yearbook office are mild in comparison to the happenings in the Agwan Flash office.

Editor George Frischer is busy with communiques about the appearance of the Flash on the newsstands while business manager Ed Wittenberg answers phones, checks accounts, and worries. Bulbs are always popping, pretty girls stand around, and the staff gets in each other's hair.

No wonder the Flash, like the ten o'clock scholar, is always late. A triple madhouse is the Daily office. Editor Clyde Martz and Ed Segrist are behind closed doors. Who knows what great decisions will come of this?

Paul Svoboda bites his pencil and gripes, Mary Kerrigan smokes while the news editors ponder about words, words, words. Reporters pound the typewriters and rush around on assignments.

The deadline's the thing where in the paper's printed before we sing. (Apologies to Billy Shakespeare.)

University of Maryland's . . .

Social blue book gives coeds tips on what they should do

. . . or shouldn't do

Women of Nebraska, are you liars or dream-girls?

The Women's League of the University of Maryland recently published a social blue book of campus etiquette in which they pointed out various items which should answer the above question.

In the league's code book, called "To Do or Not To Do," every question concerning actions by women on the campus are answered. Or better still, how do the Nebraska women rate when the following are seen on the campus:

Frisilly dresses and spike heels—"which are as out of place on the campus as overalls at a formal."

Eyes heavy with mascara at 8 a. m.

Date-making in the library, "for it isn't very complimentary to you if the boy won't spend a nickel phoning you."

Frequent exchanges of greek jewelry, "because there are a few men left who think that wearing a fraternity pin should mean something."

Door-knob hangers.

Door-knob hangers—"leave anything else necessary to the parking in the garden or along the road elsewhere."

Girls who show their false beauty by making up their faces in public.

Girls who use so much perfume that they infect the air for several yards around them.

And that ain't all. If any women still rate perfection, there are plenty of rules listed which are regularly broken.

Do you wear the right thing at the right occasion?

Do you say hello.

Do you exhibit Nebraska friendship by saying "hello" to fellow students?

Do you know all the rules connected with eating aside from direct contact with the food?

How do you rate in meeting chaperones, making introductions, attacking a receiving line and living with others?

And gals, if you claim that you can meet every one of these tests, you're either a liar or a dream-girl. And if only dream-girls follow all of these rules, Nebraska men still want liars.

Isaac Cox to lead forum Friday in Union

Northwestern University's history department chairman, Isaac J. Cox, will be here Friday to lead a forum discussion on "The Role of the United States and Latin America in War and Peace." The meeting is scheduled for 4:30 p. m. in parlor Z of the Union.

Noted as an authority on Pan-American co-operation and instructor at Northwestern since 1919, Professor Cox is recognized in "Who's Who."

With the historian on the panel will be Miss Helen Hosp, dean of women; and the authors of the Daily's "Behind the Headlines," James Olson and Ralph Ordal.

When the panel speakers have finished the meeting will be changed to an open forum. Following that refreshments will be served.

Students attend college with many and varied goals in mind

Do we as college students waste money or are we going to school to really accomplish something? Wishing to know the answer, your reporter asked, "What do you think a college education should do for the individual?"

Basketball player Don Fitz: "I would say that outside of a few specific professions, college is chiefly a broadening process."

Sis Epstein, Sigma Delta Tau: "A college education makes better citizens."

"I'm going to school because I hope it will fit me for a job," this from Delta Sig Max Meyer.

Phi Mu Eleanor Veith believes an education should give people an experience in how to adjust themselves and how to live. She adds, "It's a necessary step after high school."

Frank Little, Theta Xi: "As a result of a college education, an individual should learn how to think."

Mortar Board president Flavia Ann Tharpe says, "An education gives one a pretty good foundation to face the world and its problems upon graduation."

"Education broadens a person's interest and helps him succeed in his chosen field," thinks Pi Phi Nancy Haycock.

Pan America is redecorated cafeteria theme

A colorfully redecorated room is the first floor cafeteria of the Union which is now the "Pan-American room" where students will eat in a South American atmosphere after the room's official opening Monday night.

According to social director Pat Lahr, only the appearance of the room will be changed although special menus will be planned from time to time. The tables have been refinished and colorful chair covers of burnt orange and jade will be evidences of the South American influence. Place mats will be used on the tables instead of table cloths.

Large travel posters will decorate the room, and a juke box playing only Latin music has been installed. The Pan-American room will be open each day from 11 a. m. until 1 p. m. and from 5 to 7 p. m.
