

SHUCKS

By Chris Petersen
What ever happened...
One doesn't realize how fleeting fame is until he sits back and contemplates what has happened to these chaps who had the world by the tail in the field of sports...

Whatever happened to Montague, the burly golfer who played a sensational links game against Bing Crosby for neat stakes and won. His handicap was running the 18 holes with a hoe, rake, and garden spade instead of the more or less conventional clubs...

And what of the walking beer barrel of the fight ring, one Tony Galento, who popped up from nowhere to get a fight with the "Always on Top" Louis for the heavyweight championship of the world? Last reports from an idea-sapped sports scribe in Jersey City say that the name of Galento can't even draw bar flies to his beer suds dispensary in the New Jersey town. It was a great day for Tony.

And in the field of horse racing, there was Nebraska's sensational jockey, Earl Dew, who not so many months ago was the nation's top jockey for the year of 1940. His name was on the lips of every avid racing fan until the mount he was atop at the Caliente oval stumbled on New Year's Day. Dew was killed in that fall. Now he has been forgotten and the great racing public is looking once more for a "favorite" jockey whom they shall laden down with their praises and component parts of this thing called fame.

Then, too, not so far back, there was a woman in sports who made her name, Babe Didrickson, famous from coast to coast with her all around athletic ability in games designed only for the stronger sex. No one hears of the great Babe today. That fame, then so potent, has been so weakened by time that it does not even leave a bit of a hangover.

And so it goes, Lou Gehrig.

UN baseballers play Iowa State at Ames today

Fifteen Husker baseballers left yesterday for Ames, Ia., where they will meet the Cyclones in a twin game series Thursday and Friday. Iowa split even up in a two game series with Oklahoma. Nebraska lost their first game with the Sooners 3 to 1 and were rained out the second game.

Oscar Tegtmeier and Ernie Swanson are scheduled for mound duty for the Huskers. The other thirteen members Coach Wilber Knight has selected to make the trip are:

Catchers, Clarence Herndon, John Fitzgibbon; infielders, Bob Sauer, Bernie LeMaster, Dean Jackson, Julius Woita, Ralph Kryger, Ray Grossman; outfielders, Joe Ryan, Warren Gabelman, Erwin Klein, Sid Held; pitcher, Angelo Ossino.

Johnny Goodman, Johnny Weissmuller, Ellsworth Vines, Max Schmeling, and thousands of others. And these thousands are the lads who don't have that little something extra that makes their names hang in the minds of the public long after they have taken to the rocking chair. Its nice while it lasts, but we wonder what the boys have after their day of glory has passed on.

want the army or navy to handle it should not be discounted. Reflecting the influence of our defense activity and the war, the feeling found among many a student was expressed by a St. Edward's (Texas) University junior, who declared, "It's military training from now on—it's no use being hypocritical about it."

Results of this poll furnish further proof of the air-mindedness of today's collegian. When the program was started in January of 1939, the Surveys asked, "Do you approve of President Roosevelt's plan to train an air reserve corps of 20,000 men now in college?" A majority of 62 percent answered yes.
