The Fellows Just Don't Like Hair Bows, Sloppy Sweaters

. . . For Campus Wear

BY GEORGE ABBOTT.

At last, with this issue, the men of the campus have been given an opportunity to tell the press just what they like and don't like in the way Nebraska coeds dress. In a survey of a representative cross-section of the men on the campus it was learned that, in general, the "gals in this university dress to much alike. If there were a coed two miles away, betting that she had on a pair of saddle shoes a sloppy skirt, cardigan sweater and sox of some kind would be a safe bet."

Seventy-five percent of the men questioned did not like hair bows, hair-ribbons, or bandanas on the coeds. As to hats, the general opinion (almost 90% was that coeds on this campus should leave 'em alone.

Change in Question.

The next question asked was, "What do you like in dresses?" but the third man questioned very cutely replied, "women," so the question was changed to read, "Do you prefer that the coeds wear one or two-piece dresses, sport or dress?"

Here the men split just about even with 45 percent of them favoring one-piece dresses "with class, high heels on the shoes, stockings, and all." In this group the majority were upper classmen, seniors and graduate students.

Vote 'No' on Flats.

One hundred percent of the men queried were of the opinion that there are too many women on the campus wearing sport shoes, moc-acins and flat-heeled shoes in general. "They don't seem to realize that beefy, footballish legs, look even beefier and even more footballish in flat heels."

For rainy weather, the men voted almost unanimously in favor of the rubber, cowboy-style boot worn by the females. Just as long as they're worn during rainy weather and not every day, the men will be happy.

Snow Suits Out of Place.

Snowsuits are definitely out-of-place-on-the-campus-wear if the poll of Nebraska's men means anything. Slacks were favored by about 20 percent of the men, 30 percent were indifferent and 50 percent said "No" to their wearing on the campus. Tabooed in the poll were blouses not tucked in.

The gentlemen questioned do not like all-red outfits in general, nor do they approve of socks over stockings. They OK'd fur-coats (as long as they don't have to buy 'em), but for the campus, plaids, gabardines or any other kind of coat with sleeves is acceptable.

Unanimous voting in favor of women "dressing up" for anything going on at night, was expressed. Heelless shoes and stockingless legs were strongly opposed for night dates.

About Skirt Lengths.

The voting on skirt-length went three ways. About 20 percent decided that the woman should choose her own skirt length; 48 percent said "above the knees" (that

Out of College, Back in Civilian Clothes

What the Senior Should Buy

To all prospective and hopeful senior women, we gave this warning. Condition yourself to giving that baggy sweater to your favorite pledge and throwing those worn and weary saddle shoes to the wolves, for you will need a new and different wardrobe to face your career away from college life.

Requisite for either the job-seeker or the social light will be a three-piece suit of some smart English tweed with definitely "in the mode" lines and cut, leaving the loud red and green plaids for the under-classmen. With the suit, plan on a variety of short and long-sleeved silk blouses, some strictly tailored and possibly several with a feminine air.

Flats, of course, are out and in their place we suggest smart, comis, with the knees just showing) and the remaining 32 percent said just below the knees.

Since this poll will undoubtedly greatly change the style of coeds' dress on the campus, there will surely be some changes made. Frankly however, the women (God bless 'em) will probably merely read and forget, and ask, "Who do those men think they are to tell us how to dress—our future dates?"

fortable walking shoes such as the famous Shenanigans (with which you probably already are on good terms). A hat should be considered in this street outfit also, in fact both a snap-brim (preferably not cordoroy) and a more sophisticated bonnet would be necessary for different occasions.

To complete this daytime wear, nothing looks smarter than a well-tailored shirtwaist dress with something in the way of trick buttons or trim. Silk or wool, wark or pastel, these trim outfits will impress the new boss to the point where he might overlook certain errors made in that last letter.

When it comes to evening wear, you can indulge in all those glamour orgies that you refrained from when dressing for a mere college man. Hats with daring brims and unexpected veiling, shoes that look impossible to walk in but aren't, and above all dresses that were made for swank night-spots and select dinner parties. You are older, you feel older so dress older, forgetting the casualness of college and dressing with the one thought of beauty in your mind. Incidentally, a fitted dress coat trimmed with some expensive but not gaudy fur will put the finishing touch on a wardrobe that will bring those junior executives flocking your way.

Wear Dirty Cords While You Can, The Time Will Come

. . . When You'll Graduate

BY BOB SCHLATER.

Whos says cords aren't the official garb for college men? Evidently they haven't realized just how much this type of slack means to the student who goes for weeks without a laundry job on said pants. It is probably the thing held dearest in every man's heart—that period when he could wear dirty cords and get by with it.

In the first place they are the most comfortable and versatile thing that can be worn on every occasion. The student can get up in the morning, clean his room, mop the floor and go to class in them. Afternoon coke dates, matinee dances and movies require the dirty campus cords. Evenings of course with picnics make it necessary for cords. Simple isn't it? If you could sleep in them, you could go weeks without a change of clothes.

Yep! Those days will all be gone too soon. In ten years we'll have to don suits for business wear. Lets enjoy those cords now.

And keep them dirty! To match stylish saddle shoes!
