A War Ago

By Marsa Lee Civion.

Eight hundred students and faculty members attended the "Fete of Nations" big all university party at Temple Theatre. Entertainment was provided by different university organizations. Success of the evening was the headline pageant "America" depicting the growth of our nation since 1789.

Professor N. M. Fling was to give a course on the "World War" one of the seventeen special war courses offered at the 1918 summer session of the University of Wisconsin.

The 1918 Cornhusker containing photographs, letters, words of comment and praise of men now representing Nebraska students in the trenches and campus and all departments of war was appropriately called the "War Baby."

Dr. Hattie Plum presented a lecture series entitled "Civilians in Relief Work of Red Cross" for her sociology class to acquaint them with the work they might do.

Entries for Intra-mural Debate Due Wednesday

Deadline for the receipt of entries in this year's intramural debate competition is Wednesday, Leroy T. Laase of the speech department, director of debating, announced. In the tournament the question will be "Resolved: that congress should enact legislation providing for the conscription of labor (men and women) for the prosecution of the war."

If there is sufficient interest shown by men, women will be allowed in intra-mural debating just as they are allowed in intercollegiate debating.

Each team will consist of two speakers, with eight minute constructive speeches and four minute rebuttals. Substitutions of personnel may be made from round to round providing the names are included on the original entry list.

Teams Eliminated.

The schedule will be conducted on a round robin basis, if the number of entries permit, otherwise on a double elimination basis. As in the past, the debates will be held in the houses of the affirmative teams. At the close of the season a rotating trophy, won last year by Zeta Beta Tau, will be awarded to the winning team. Mr. Laase's office will assume full responsibility for administration of the tournament. Organized houses who plan to enter should send an announcement of their intentions together with names of those from whom the team personnel will be chosen to that office.

Individuals who have represented the university in intercollegiate debating are ineligible for participation. Each team must be prepared to debate both sides of the question, and in so far as possible will alternate sides from round to round.

Jesse Believes War Reading Has Purpose

New Library Assistant Asserts Times Are Not Conducive to Browsing

Library reading must become more purposeful in war since the times are not as conducive to general browsing, believes William J. Jesse, new assistant director of libraries who took up his work on the campus last week. He takes the post formerly filled by Dr. Stephen A. McCarthy who has become acting director since the resignation of R. A. Miller.

He expressed great interest in working with the divisional reading rooms planned for the new Don L. Love Memorial library now under construction on the campus. Such a scheme was inaugurated in 1938 at Brown university in Providence, R. I., where Jesse formerly was head of the readers' division, and circulation was increased some 75 percent by 1940, he reports.

He cautioned against expecting such sudden results at Nebraska, however, since the war is bringing unpredictable changes to educational institutions and their student bodies.

Jesse praised the plans for the new university library as having been started long enough ago and worked on by enough well informed and interested men to give an ideal building for this campus. He is pleased at the "universal enthusiasm" for the building voiced not only by students and faculty members but by Lincoln citizens who seem to be following its progress with great interest.

Much of the work offered in the two-year course may be applied toward a four-year degree, according to Chancellor Boucher. Regardless whether he is taking a four or a two year course, it is the purpose of the university to furnish the student a program with "structural unity and a specific purpose," he said.

Ag Campus...

(Continued from Page 1.) the Nebraska Grain Improvement association, soybeans have in the past been of only minor crop importance but he predicts that they will become of increasing importance in Nebraska.

The USDA War Board has asked that the soybean acreage be increased by one-half in Nebraska for the year 1942. The growers' have already begun to think about increasing this acreage. This fact has been indicated by the number of seeds that are being sent into the state seed laboratory this spring. R. C. Kinch, state seed analyst, states that nearly five times as many soybeans have been sent into the lab for germination and purity tests than was received last year. This fact in itself indicates that the farmers are planning to increase production.

Soybean to Become Standard.

These facts seem to point towards one thing. With the shortage of imports of vegetable oils and with the increased production of soybeans, it seems quite evident that our salad dressing, vegetable shortenings, and other such products that we use will be made from the oil obtained from soybeans. This situation will last for the duration, after this, soybeans will no doubt be considered as a standard product and again necessity has caused us to use what we had most efficiently.
