Double-talking Physical Culture Coed Rates Strait Gate to Bad Pad Nut Hut

BY HELEN GOODWIN.

It all begins with a night several weeks ago. Jeannie—that's my roommate—and I are looking over the "Ladies' Tailor-Mades from $25 up." I try on a grey shadow plaid for size. "How do you like it?" I asks, admiring me in the mirror.

"It's a zoot suit," says Jeannie, thoughtfully, "I'm backing that reet pleat."

I had heard the song before so I didn't see anything unusual in her answer. Jeannie's the kind of a girl who's always picking up new backtalk. Like last year it was double talk and the year before pig Latin. . . So I just buys the suit and we leave. It was my size which was lucky, it being a genuine English Sheland for only $30.

We're walking down the street when a good looking blonde guy passes. He's a blonde and Jeannie's a sucker for blondes. "Check that draped shape," she says, putting a rhymed word in it. Especially at meals. She says things grabbing my arm in an iron vise which comes from pulling weights in the gym every afternoon. Jeannie's one of these physical culture nuts. She's got a picture of Charles Atlas that she compares biceps with every night. The blonde gives us a dirty look and walks on.

As I says before, that don't worry me none cause blondes are always giving Jeannie dirty looks. And if it had stopped there, nothing would have happened. But after that Jeannies goes hog wild, she can't say a sentence without like "Shoot me the rash hash," or "Taste the limp shrimp."

Rate Date?

It gets so bad that none of the boys on the campus will give Jeannie a date. She drives them crazy murmuring a lot of mush such as "Give me a bliss kiss; hug me a mite, tight, baby," and "Make with rationed passion."

You can see their point. They yell that it makes 'em nervous. Poor Jeannie gets so downhearted that she starts to drinking to forget women. I think maybe this'll break her of the horrible curse that's fallen on her, but it only becomes worse. Soon the bartenders avoid her cause she won't ask for a slug of whisky normal-like. Instead she orders a shot of "sotch scotch" or "numb rum" or "sin gin."

Coise Voise!

About this time exams come along. It turns out that Jeannie writes all her sentences using the double timed words. She composes a whole page on "Smelly Shelly." The latter somewhat irks a prof, who gives her a D. Jeannie passes only three courses out of five. The teachers get so worried they call her a psycho-analyst. The poor guy goes batty trying a cure.

That's when they took her away. Poor old Jeannie. I guess she was just a dirt skirt. I went to see her once. She's happy sitting in her cell, saying things like "the maudlin warden."

Coeds Dress Up Dresses, Suits With Accessories . . . To Replace Formals

By Pat Catlin.

Clips, ear rings, and bracelets head the 'must' list, with formals a thing of the past, to dress up tailored suits and dresses.

Plastic molded in wierd shapes is the favorite with manufacturers. Much desired pastel shades trimmed with rhinestones in the form of heads, horses, and flowers add that distinctive touch to an ensemble. Kappa Jeannie Browne accentuates and the blue in her new gabradine suit with a shoulder pin of blue and celar plastic.

Eisenberg jewelry is tops again in the accessory line. The clips are larger this year with more stones in the setting. Jane Emery, Delta Gamma, wears her matching clip and bracelet with balck to set off the 'ice.' Alpha Phi pep girl Polly Petty adorns her plainer dresses with a bronze-faced queen wearing a crown set in blue and red rhinestones.

Dress Up Suits.

Suits combine easily with accessories to make up a smooth outfit. June Griffin showed Tri Delt sisters how she could get double wear out of her suit by purchasing a brown hat, purse, and pair of gloves trimmed in white saddle stitching to match that on her suit. For school wear June dons a crisp, white blouse or harmonizing sweater. Mary Aileen Cochran of the KAT house turned to our friend the alligator for her shoes and purse worn with her Harris tweed suit.

Soft veils tacked saucily on a black hat add that feminine touch to our coed's warrobe. Betty Krause, Pi Phi, picked a small black hat with a sweetheart brim to complement her black crepe dress cut on the new sophisticated lines. A black velvet bonnet frames the dark beauty of Mary Lou Holtz, Alpha Chi Omega. Shirley Wiley, the arorw girl, perches a little red hat on her head, tucks a red purse under her arm and off she goes in new kelley green coat.

The wonderful things about this flare for accessories is that you can take last year's dress, put a clever pin on it, and presto—you have a new outfit in the eyes of your admirers.
