

UN Squad Members Sign Game Petition

... Request Board Meeting

Members
Athletic Board
University of Nebraska
Sirs:

We, the undersigned are varsity football players who request that you meet some time this week. We also request that when you do meet, you put your stamp of approval on the proposed Missouri-Nebraska spring football match.

A spring game is the only solution to our football problem. If there is no spring game, there will be little or no incentive to keep us reporting. Few, if any, of us will be around next fall, so a game now is the only happy solution.

Missouri students and players are in favor of the match and Nebraska students, despite Gregg McBride's assertion otherwise, are anxious to see a spring game. Besides all this, we have some scores to settle with "those Missouri guys."

We submit that you board members owe it to our coach, to the university and to us to meet immediately.

Respectfully yours,

In view of the fact students intending to take the V-12 and A-12 examinations for Navy and Army specialized training program, may have questions which they wish to be answered, the special meeting was arranged specifically to discuss these problems and arrive at the best possible conclusions, related administrative officials. # University Players Stage 'What Every Woman Knows', Mar. 24

Opening of "What Every Woman Knows," starring Dave Andrews and Bette Heine, takes place at the Temple Theater tomorrow night.

The story revolves about a young girl, Maggie Wylie, who is adored by her older brothers and politely shunned by the various suitors who have been picked out for her. The two brothers, David and James, discover a poor ambitious scholar, John Shand, and offer him money to continue his schooling if he will agree to marry their sister in five years if she wishes it.

Father Conspires.

The father, Alick Wylie, is a conspirator in the plot and becomes somewhat confused when John Shand returns, having completed his education and gained some political prestige by his election to parliament.

Upon Shand's election, Maggie offers to release him from his promise to marry her, fearing she isn't educated well enough to take the position of the wife of a political figure. True to his word, Shand marries her and takes her to London with him to live in a beautiful house and serve as hostess to her husband's diplomat friends.

Shand becomes infatuated with the Lady Sybil, a beautiful young blond of aristocratic birth, and spends a few weeks at her aunt's cottage in Surrey to write an important speech under Sybil's influence. While there, Shand discovers that he is not in love with Sybil at all. He also discovers "What Every Woman Knows," that his own wife has been the greatest influence in his career and has made him what he is.

Most Elaborate Set.

Staging of the play is probably the most elaborate that has yet been attempted this year, featur-

From Pounds ... BUTTER? ... To Pats

It used to be "pounds" of butter each night at organized houses and boarding houses, but this week it will be only "pats." Caught short by the government order freezing butter sales for the remainder of the week, housemothers are pondering the problem of feeding hungry students on one or two pounds of butter.

Most house chaperons rationed butter within the houses at breakfast and lunch yesterday in anticipation of a week-long seige. Some were able to obtain a few pounds from grocers and dairy men. Others were awaiting an okay to replenish their supply.

Women's residence halls were assured of butter thru an institutional rating, and the Union's crib and dining rooms are classified as restaurants.

Students who are unable to get foods frozen in the recent order are expected to crowd the Union and downtown eating places in order to get their vitamins until next week when rationing of butter, cheese, meat, margarine and lards will go into effect.

Something Different ...

L.S.U. Students Pick Queen

Irish students on the Louisiana State university campus highlighted their annual St. Patrick's day celebration with the presentation of Nelva Jordan, Irish freshman, as the queen of the day's activities.

An appropriate ceremony around a flying Irish flag featured the crowning of the queen by the president of the university, Irish jigs, skits and tunes, and the placing of shamrock at the foot of the flagpole.

All Irish students on the campus held a big St. Patrick's party with appropriate entertainment after the day's celebration.

ing four different sets. According to Joe Zimmerman, director and producer, there has been ten times as much money spent on costumes, of the 1896 period, than has been spent in any play of the season.

"What Every Woman Knows" was first produced in 1902 with Maud Adams playing the lead. Later it was rewritten for the screen featuring Helen Hayes.

Characters are: Maggie Wylie played by Bette Heine, John Shand by Dave Andrews, David and James Wylie, the two brothers played by Bob Black and Bob Hyde, respectively. Don Rickey takes the part of Alick Wylie, Helen Kieselbach is Lady Sybil, and the Comtesse de la Briere, her aunt, is played by Jo Weaver Kline. Mr. Venables, a courtly old diplomat is played by Henry Lee and almost every member of the speech department will be seen in the crowd scene of the second act.
