DuTeau, editor of the Alumnus and secretary-treasurer of the Nebraska Alumni association, writes in his "Public Relations" article, "Unfortunately, too few alumni of state universities have appreciated how important a role they can play in the public relations of the university, as persons who were equipped by it for greater service and broader opportunities, for greater happiness and living, they owe the university a debt of gratitude and of devotion. Convocation Recognizes Honor Students

Eisenhower Introduces World Democracy Plan

Milton S. Eisenhower, president of Kansas State college and brother of allied commander in the European theater, speaking before approximately 800 students, parents and faculty members Wednesday morning at the sixteenth annual honor's convocation in the Union ballroom, outlined his plan for the ultimate achievement of a world democracy.

"We will not attain world democracy in our time nor will every nation of the world even start up the road leading to democracy," he said.

The former associate director of OWI, who arrived in North Africa one month after the invasion forces led by Gen. Dwight Eisenhower, pointed out that before democracy can be introduced into much of the world, the peoples must be educated to use it.

Prior to the outbreak of hostilities the rest of the world had an unbalanced conception of the United States from the movies, braggart tourists and novels and, according to Eisenhower, it was this idea of Americans that had to be combated to establish confidence in the United States among allies and neutrals when the war broke out.

Presents Three Points.

Setting forth a three point program, Eisenhower advocated as a means of obtaining a lasting peace that the following be included in the peace treaty if there be one: Provisions for a free press in every government for "a free press constitutes the main difference between a democracy on one hand and the totalitarian form of government on the other"; a
