pin point of Polynesian drowsing in the Pacific untouched by the war. This peace was broken in the summer of 1942 by the arrival of an American Engineer, George Dodd, who was sent, with a blueprint in his pocket, to this tiny South Sea island to make preliminary plans for an airfield in advance of the coming of the Seabees. This novel shows the human impact of the war as it strikes home in Polynesia. It becomes the story of the transport, the Seabees and the bulldozers
