Cornhusker Returns To Peacetime Policy

Bigger and better are definitely the objectives of the 1946 Cornhusker staff as plans are revealed for the publication of the first peacetime book in three years. "For as the campus changes back to a peacetime policy, so changes the Cornhusker," stated Joyce Crosbie, yearbook editor.

Using the theme "Nebraska Plans for Tomorrow with Blue Prints of Today," the yearbook will picture the expansion of the campus. The book will have white leather covers and heavy white paper, making it the size of the 1943 edition, the last pre-war type of volume.

Schedule of pictures for the various sections is nearly completed. Organizations and activities are now being contacted for group pictures while staff photographers have already begun taking candid shots.

The current Cornhusker sales campaign by the Tassels will close Friday.

Council Honors Ex-War Workers At Dance Friday

War Council, in recognition of all students who have in some way contributed to the war effort and final victory, is sponsoring a dance in the Union ballroom Friday evening, beginning at 9 p. m.

NRO students, returned veterans, War Council workers, bandage rollers, baby-sitters, Nebraskans for Servicemen workers, war stamp sellers, any and all students involved in some type of work relevant to war activities, are especially invited to attend the dance, according to Council president, Alice Abel.

Entertainment has been planned for intermission, and cokes and brownies will be served.

NEWS IN BRIEF

by BILL ROBERTS

Unity, basic necessity of progress, received this weekend its severest setbacks since the outbreak of war in 1939.

Showing widening cracks were both international efforts for peace and home efforts to meet the painful problems of reconversion and maintenance of just living standards through the stormy years ahead.

London reports continued to tell of unbridged differences between the Big Five foreign ministers now meeting there. Major block is the problem of Balkan peace treaties, and indirectly, American and British recognition of the present governments in those countries.

Attempts to compromise the Anglo-American and Russian differences have thus far failed. Observers are now talking of the possibility of adjournment without any major agreement.

President Truman's leadership in congress is visibly weaker than ever before.

DIRECTORY LISTS OUT

The check list for the Student Directory will be at the check stand in the Union, Wednesday, from 10 to 6. It will be in the Finance Office on Ag Campus Thursday, from 10 to 5. Every student must check his own name and address for the Student Directory.

Dr. Wimberly Publishes New Book of Tales

"Mid-Country; Best Writings from the Heart of America" an anthology edited and selected by Dr. Lowry Charles Wimberly, professor of English and editor of the Prairie Schooner, appeared in book stores Monday.

The volume, published by the University Press, contains short stories, sketches and poetry, all of which take the center of the United States as a setting. Among the contributing authors are Katherine Anne Porter, Erskine Caldwell, Wallace Stegner, William March, Eudora Welty, Jessamyn West, Walter Van Tilburg Clark, Ruth Suckow, J. Frank Dobie, Jesse Stuart, Mark van Doren and the late Vincent Stephen Benet.

Clara Marie Allen of the Fine Arts department designed the vignette, Joseph Lotto did the handlettering and Emily Schosberger, University editor, planned the general format.

Olson Announces Debate Meeting Thursday at 7 P.M.

All students interested in debate and discussion will meet with Mr. Donald Olson, director of debating, Thursday at 7 p. m. in Temple 203.

Emphasizing that everyone will have a full opportunity to gain experience before tryouts are held for the varsity squad, Mr. Olson stated that students of all classes and with much or little experience are welcome.

Subject for debate is U. S. promotion of free trade. Trips will be made this year to Iowa City; Evanston, Ill.; Denver, Colo.; Austin, Texas; and elsewhere.

Returning Vets Long To Be Just 'Mister'

Ex-G.I.'s want to forget the war. This desire was expressed by more than a score interviewed of the 364 ex-soldiers enrolled in various colleges on the campus.

War vets want to forget all the unpleasantness of life in the service, and the war, because they are afraid if they talk about themselves it will mark them as different, both with their instructors and their fellow students. They want to be like everyone else—just plain "mister."

From All Over World.

These veterans come from all branches of the service and from all the fighting fronts of the world. There is the foot soldier who slugged it out on Guadalcanal and the Solomons, the tank man who rode across France with Patton's forces, the bombardier from the Eighth air force in England, the medical corpsman, the truck driver, the artilleryman, the sailor who helped convoy supplies to the southwest Pacific, the recon pilot from the China-Burma-India theater.

Less than a year ago being a civilian at home was just a wild dream. Some of the former G.I.'s have to pinch themselves to realize it. The shock of coming back so quickly and unexpectedly has left some of them a little bewildered and perplexed, but in the

AUF Drive Collects $32 In Two Days

In two days of covering the campus for donations to the All-University fund, only $32 was collected by AUF workers, according to Jan Engle, AUF director.

"Only four days remain in which to collect nearly $3,000 on this campus," Miss Engle stated, and added: "Two dollars per student is an insignificant sum compared to what others have given in this war."

Workers will continue to contact all students for contributions to the fund in an effort to make the university go over the top in this drive, which is the only opportunity students have to donate to the National War fund, Nebraskans for Servicemen and the World Student Service fund.

Coeds Hear 'Step Lively' Activity Plans

The first meeting of the "Step Lively" series, whose purpose is to acquaint new coeds with university activities and functions, takes place in Ellen Smith hall at 5 p. m. today.

The presidents of A.W.S., B.A.B.W., Alpha Lambda Delta and Coed Counselors will explain their respective organizations and tell the plans for the annual activities Mart, which will be held Oct. 27 in the Union ballroom from 1 to 3 p. m.

Booths, representing the various organizations at the activities Mart, will be set up in the ballroom, and interested students will have an opportunity to register for activities. According to AWS President Midge Holtzschler, freshmen will be permitted to participate in activities following the Mart.

same breath they'll tell you it's nothing requiring services of an "expert adjuster."

They've discovered it's kind of hard talking "civilian language" after being in the service so long. And they're a little self-conscious about the difference in their ages and those of the regular underclassmen whom they generally call "teen agers."

Many of the veterans were university students when they enlisted and have returned to finish work on their degree. Others, attracted by the generous provisions of the GI Bill of Rights find it an opportunity to get a degree which probably would not have existed for them before the war.

"Hard to Study."

Duance H. Willey, 26, of Lincoln, says: "Adjustment to student life again after so many years of service is a bit perplexing. When I try to study, I find my mind wandering. I tried to study in the library—it was too quiet. I tried the Student Union—it was too noisy. But it's not as hard as I thought it would be." Willey was a squad leader with the Third division which spearheaded the drive on the Rhine. He was wounded by a mine explosion and was discharged in August.

New UN Armory Costs $300,000

Nebraska's new armory is expected to be completed in six months, according to Superintendent of Grounds Seaton. The ground for the building, near 14th street by the coliseum, will be broken today. The armory, estimated to be 120 by 160 feet, will be used for teaching military and naval sciences, the army's drill floors occupying the second floor, and the navy's the first.

New Law Dean Reveals Special Course Plans

Lawyers recently discharged from the armed forces will be offered a special "refresher" course by the university college of law which will reopen Jan. 7, according to Frederick E. Beutel, dean of the college.

Changes in the law will be emphasized in the six-month's course. Extending thru July 31 without interruption, the course will also be offered first year law students. It will be the equivalent of a full year's course, Dean Beutel stated. Registration will begin Jan. 3.

Dean Beutel began his new duties Tuesday after being named dean of the law college on Sept. 15 by the Board of Regents.

Before leaving Washington, D. C., where he was assistant solicitor for the Department of Interior, Dean Beutel made arrangements with the Association of American Law Schools for the reopening of the university law college, closed the past two years due to the war. Dean Beutel added that he had interviewed prospective candidates for the college faculty.

Lt. Col. S. Kiger Receives Medal

Lt. Col. Stanley W. Kiger, formerly of Omaha and a graduate of the university in 1932, has been awarded the Bronze Star medal for outstanding work as the assistant port commander at Marseille, France. Col. Kiger entered the service as a first lieutenant in March, 1942.

Builders of Love library, the Olson Construction company, holds the contract. Architects are preparing plans for plumbing, heating and electrical equipment and installation, the bids for which should be settled within the next three weeks.

Alternate Section.

A $23,000 north section, designed for use as an alternate in the bid, will be added if the plumbing, heating and electrical expenses run enough under the $300,000 total allowed. This addition would contain desirable space for both the army and the navy for storage and classroom space. The present bid of $207,000 would be $228,000 with the section, leaving $72,000 for plumbing, heating and electrical contracts. If, however, these contracts do exceed the $72,000, the north section will be excluded.

Drew Pearson Lectures Tonite On Capitol Politics

Speaking on "Washington Merry-go-round," Drew Pearson newspaper and radio columnist will open the Town Hall series tonight at 8 p. m. in the St. Paul church.

Together with Robert Allen, Drew Pearson began writing the column "Washington Merry-go-round" in 1932 and since that time the two have become known as minor political powers who both frighten and amuse senators and other occupants of Capitol Hill. They have published several books, among them "Nine Old Men" and "Nine Old Men at the Crossroads" both of which deal with the supreme court justices.

Pearson has traveled widely, having covered stories in England, India, Australia, New Zealand, Cuba, South Africa, China, Japan and most of Europe.

To be featured on the series are Lt. John Mason Brown, drama critic, Nov. 2; Maria Osmena, daughter of the president of the Philippines, Jan. 28; Harrison Forman, foreign correspondent, Feb. 13; and Nora Wain, noted author, April 12.

University YMCA Meets for First Session Tonight

Culminating the YMCA membership drive last week, the university YM announced that tonight at 7:15 p. m. it will hold its first organizational meeting in the lounge in the Temple building.

Four commissions plan to meet and make plans for their respective groups. Tom Sorenson, Chairman of the Political Effectiveness Commission and Bill Roberts, chairman of the Faith of Life Commission, and two other commissions devoted to World Relatedness and Personal Effectiveness are the groups that will continue the contacts, education and fellowship provided in the YMCA smaller commission groups.

TASSEL VACANCY

Coeds interested in filing for ag-at-large vacancy in Tassels should turn in their names to the Union office no later than Friday, Oct. 5. Filing date for the barb-at-large vacancy has been extended also to this Friday, according to Gerry McKinsey, president.
