Wake Up . . .

The University of Nebraska is well on its way to becoming famous once again. As usual, however, it will be due to their lack of commitment on an outstanding issue. It's about time someone started taking that proverbial walk in the sun, or removing a few cobwebs which have obscured their foresight.

When posterity speaks of this cherished institution of higher learning it will not be in the sense of famous last words, but famous never spoken words.

The students of the university has taken a definite stand on the current Big Six racial controversy but the content of administrative statement might better be said thusly: Quote . . . unquote. How can students ever hope to accomplish a voice in state or national affairs when their only voice in an institution of which they are a member is indirectly silenced by a noncommittent peep of authority.

The students of the university have taken a definite action of allowing Negroes to participate in Big Six athletics, and our own council went on record as supporting the plan to the extent of Nebraska's withdrawal from the conference if the desired action is not accomplished. Iowa State's Athletic Council lent their support to the measure April 17 when Dean M. D. Helsner, as chairman of the council, stated Iowa State's willingness to allow Negro participation in the Big Six.

It is evident that the plan proposed by the KU council is one of importance and will be taken before the Big Six governing board. It might be well, therefore, if our own representative on that board disclosed the stand he plans to take in the matter. For once let the students know beforehand the plan of attack instead of after, with a "well it happened like this . . ."

The Student Council has made known its position in the matter. Now let the powers that be do the same.

This is no minor problem so let's not again find ourselves getting just an E for effort.

Col. J. P. Murphy Will Address Vet Group on Housing

A regular meeting of the Veterans Organization of University of Nebraska will be held at 7:15 p. m. Tuesday, April 23, in the Union ballroom.

Col. J. P. Murphy, head of the university ROTC department, will speak to the group on housing problems and how the university plans to relieve the present crisis.

All veterans are urged to attend, according to Public Relations Committee Chairman Richard Sinsel.

Journalist Offers Two Scholarships

Two Joseph C. Seacrest scholarships for university journalism students will be presented May 6 instead of the one presented heretofore, F. C. Blood, acting director of the school of journalism, announced today.

Awarded to journalism upperclassmen with outstanding records, the scholarships carry a $500 stipend. All applications for the awards must be in the journalism office by May 4, Blood said.

Prof. Loeffel Announces 34th Annual Feeder's Day

Prof. William J. Loeffel, chairman of the animal husbandry department, has announced that between 2,000 and 4,000 livestockmen from all parts of the state are expected at the university on Friday, April 26, for their 34th annual Feeder's Day.

Activities will begin at 9:15 a. m. and close at 3:30 p. m.

LETTERIP

To the Editor:

Things have changed—the veterans are returning, formals are back, and social life and activities are reaching new height. In one major aspect of college life only is interest on the decline.

A year ago last fall the YWCA Vespers were taken over by the Religious Welfare Council and made all-campus, open to everyone. The project met with great approval for a few months; the service men even had to be moved into the ballroom several times to accommodate the large number of students wishing to attend. By spring, however, other things had captured the attention of all but a handful. It was hoped that attendance would pick up in the fall, but it didn't.

Attendance at Vespers is not an obligation; it's an opportunity. Continually complaints are heard that students don't have the time or an atmosphere conducive to thinking and getting a fresh perspective. The Vesper service is designed to fill this lack. It provides a time in the middle of the week when students can gather in a quiet place to thinking things through to the point of determining what is most important to them. Regardless of what a person's beliefs are, he can benefit from such a time.

Every Tuesday at 5 p. m. the service is held in parlors XYZ. For those to whom it is more important than a coke, a show or a bull session it will become a regular part of the weekly schedule.

Sincerely,
MARY ANN MATTOON.

The Ash Can

You just can't win, you no sooner get your hands in the dishwasher than your nose starts to itch. Some poor fellow was standing, just idly breathing, in Campus Line Monday, when a bright lass walks up, looks at him, and snaps, "Shut your mouth, you're not going to say anything, anyway." And they weren't even married.

Excellent example of adult humor, as evidenced by inmates of this institution, is the current quickie about the man who took his dog to have his tail docked. The Vet complained, contending that to cut the tail so short would ruin the appearance of an otherwise beautiful animal. "I don't care," stormed the man, "My mother-in-law is coming next week, and I don't want any vestige of friendliness to show."

Present gripe by both professors and scholars (not to be confused with Student Union students) is that with the advent of spring, a mass exodus away from classrooms has begun. Stern measures are expected fairly soon, with some near approaches already underway, making it a bit difficult for those matriculators who don't consider it beneath their dignity to appear for roll-call. Biggest offenders are those whose interest in school is the "My folks made me come down here," attitude. Chopin, calculus and cryptography are playing second, third and fourth place on some chicks' click parades. Laps of the human race, that is.
