Coeds' Revenge . . .

(Dr. Swindler wouldn't consider this an editorial, but we couldn't resist, soooo . . .)

Motor Boat or Putt-Putt it matters not, either spells revenge in its most ghastly form.

Tonight's the night that all the coeds cooperate and do the dirt . . . the night the coy become fiends and run roughshod over the UN male.

Everything is topsy turvy for the big occasion as all the gals whisper and twitter over the concoctions representing a corsage designed to win the hearts of each one and only.

Word as it from sources of yesteryear (that's back in '41 when all of us were only about 20 and in the prime of life) that the corsage would always signify something about the individual for whom it was created. Indiana coeds used to present their dates with a flower corsage suggesting what each wanted to do on the big nite. That custom however died an early death when local Bloomington florists were deluged with orders for mistletoe. One in particular was quite perplexed when he received an order for a corsage of clover. A favorite theme for the dubiously honorable gift on this campus is the fraternity to which the lucky (or luckless in behalf of Mr. Baker) character belongs.

Along this line the following suggestions might be appropriately enlarged upon to resemble a corsage.

In case you little coeds are going with a PHI PSI you might give him an off color Orange bow tie . . . a BETA, a pair of fly-boy wings . . . an SAE, a picture of a mob scene . . . a SIG CHI, a bed with a sign saying "Carton slept here.!!"

So with the rising of the next werewolf moon the frivolity shall commence for another year. As a closing comment I get hysterical when I think of all the things one could present Walt Simon for a corsage . . . bon voyage all you lucky, lucky people.

Daily Hears Union Arena Fight Report

Having received some official but alarming reports concerning a big fight scheduled to come off next Monday, the Daily Nebraskan passes on to you the information regarding the surprise-packed event.

To know what it's actually all about, you'll have to be there yourself, but as an incentive we can tell you that Romulo Soldevilla of Kosmet Klub show fame will be there. Then there's John Carson. He'll be there, too, pulling more than rabbits out of his hat as he entertains with his magician's act.

Whether this battle is one of wits or of padded fists no one can say, but when the loser goes down on the count of ten Dr. Rogers will give some interesting statistics concerning the spectacular bout.

The place of this novel feature of the coming week is the Union ballroom. Time Monday at 11 a. m. See you there as things start happening when a voice "And in this corner . . ."

have a better chance statistically Dr. Fowler continued but "the purpose of research is to locate points which may become strained after marriage, on the basis that 'fore-warned is fore-armed.' Our challenge is to appreciate and to work out differences, not to make check-mark choices of mates by research and statistics."

"Sex relationship is a matter of basic importance," the doctor said, "because so many young people arrive at marriage with hodge-podge knowledge. First, it is important that we know our facts, which doctors and psychologists are glad to provide, and, again, it is the attitude toward sex—its acceptance as natural, desirable and mutually satisfactory—that is of prime importance."

"Although we would like to think of marriage as an escape from the chaos in which we live, we do not live in a vacuum and so we must accept the dreary figure given us by the census boards—one out of every three marriages in this country ends in divorce," Dr. Fowler pointed out.

Dr. Fowler continued that problems of war marriages were much the same, only intensified, and added to them were the conditions of separation and change. She said she deplored the prevailing ostrich-like attitude that change is non-existent.

"Growth in marriage is desirable, and instead of ignoring normal growth in people, change must be made of our positive approach if we are to solve troubled marriages," the educator declared.

Concluding that the primary reason for troubles of war-marriages was that there has not been enough time to make thoughtful selection, and too much time to live alone, Dr. Fowler cautioned young people to think of marriage not as a job but as a way of life.

Sunday morning at 11 o'clock in Parlors XYZ.
