What Christmas Means to Me

BY KILLJOY.

When I was a youngster I used to get up early in the morning and rush down to open my presents to see what Santa Claus had left me.

During the war, everything was different. Shortages were all around us, the stoppage of production made Christmas seem different.

There is no war. No presents. Before I used to get enjoyment from eating too much at a big Christmas dinner. Now I can't eat a big dinner. Hangover.

Catching the Spirit.

On Christmas Eve, I hope I can catch the spirit and cheerfulness of the season, especially the spirits.

Before sugar plums used to dance before my eyes. Now all I can see is my nose. But Christmas means more than these trivial items. There are formals, parties, and jolly good times. I come face

Homeward Bound Students Fill Vacation With Studies, Sprees

Christmas vacation starts officially Saturday noon, but if you're leaving at any time from now on be careful that you don't get trampled in the rush of collegians trying to get out of town. It might be interesting to imagine what all the students are going to be doing for the next couple of weeks. (It might be interesting, though it probably won't, but read on sucker.)

The two extreme types of students will continue, or in some cases just begin, to peruse their textbooks. The PBK's, or is it KPB's, will continue their mental labor trying to improve their 96 averages. At the other end of the scholastic scale those unfortunates who received windowed-envelopes from the Dean of Student Affairs this week may find it well to open their books during vacation, creasing the pages carefully to prevent breaking the binding. In fact T. J. said in his letter, "... students in considerable number have used a portion of their Christmas vacation to advantage in reviewing subjects in which they are having difficulty... I urge you to try it."

Others will go from the campus to find some means of picking up a little of that root of all evil over the holidays. The department stores will probably need as many extra employees after Christmas to exchange gifts as they will before to sell them. Many unique jobs are available at this season. Several music majors hope that at Christmas time Western Union will have openings in positions where vocal ability is important. Joe Wolf, president of Iota Feela Thigh, states that he would like to hire a coed to fill Xmas stockings for him. The stockings are some nylon hose that he has purchased.

The None and Only.

Many Hucksters, Huskers I mean, say that they are traveling across country to see their true loves. When they come back a large percentage instead of speaking of their one and only will be saying, "None and Lonely."

A few people on the campus may devote the holidays to Christmas Cheer. I mean the type of person who says, "Enough of this fooling around. Let's get down to some serial drinking." They'll see to it that the next fortnight will be no holiday for Tom and Jerry. By January 6 they won't even be able to tell black from white, but the Black and White will tell on them.

They'll return to the campus tapping around with a cane, they will have been blind for so long.

I'm sure that this group mentioned is a small one and that most of us will spend a sober vacation. So, in conclusion, may I say, "Seagram's Greetings to all of you."

rade, pageant, rodeo, and "tanking" for failure to appear in the required dress to print dresses and overalls. To make the fair complete, hot dogs and cold drinks are sold throughout the day. The show ends with the dance in the Activities building.

Present Farmer's Fair board members are: Wilbur Bluhm and Carol Capek, Co-managers; Marilyn Hartsook, secretary; Dwight Johnson, treasurer; Carol Bridenbaugh and Bob Osler. Six junior members will be chosen early next semester.
