Czech Pianist Offers Varied Recital Tonight

When students who hold season tickets to the Lincoln Symphony Orchestra concert series attend the recital of Czech pianist Rudolf Firkusny tonight at 8:30 p. m. in the Stuart Theater, they will hear a program representative of the entire piano literature.

The artist, who has done more than any other musician to revive interest in the body of Czech composition, will perform classical, romantic, impressionistic, and contemporary music, including two numbers by the modern American composer, Samuel Barber. First touring the United States ten years ago, Firkusny returned to Europe to concertize the continental musical capitals. Fleeing Prague just before the entrance of the Nazis, he worked his way to France and eventually to Portugal where he sailed for America, arriving in 1941.

His performance of the Dvorak piano concerto with the Chicago Symphony orchestra in Ravinia Park shortly thereafter was the first time that the work had been played in America in 65 years. Smetana, the other outstanding Czech nationalistic composer is represented by two numbers from the complete program, which includes:

- Two Choral Preludes Bach
- Come God Creator Rejoice Now, Christians
- Variations Serieuses Mendelssohn
- Sonata, Op. 27 ("Moonlight") Beethoven
