

Nebraska Scores Again . . .

Nebraska educators and especially Dr. Frank E. Sorenson, assistant dean of the University summer school, are to be commended. The University of Nebraska is the only state institution outside of the United Nations Headquarters area to announce a large scale United Nations international educational program.

This summer the University will have a program featuring four special United Nations clinics and a special workshop seminar at which public school teachers from all over Nebraska will develop an educational program. Details of this UN experiment appeared in Tuesday's Daily Nebraskan.

The University should be proud of Dr. Sorenson and Chancellor R. G. Gustavson whose interest in UN education brought about the Nebraska plan. Dr. Sorenson had planned a UN workshop for the summer session and went to Lake Success in February hoping to secure lecturers for his project. The United Nations suggested that Nebraska carry out a carefully planned international education program similar to some exploratory, more casual experiments being tried out in schools of Great Neck, Long Island.

After much work and planning and after Dr. Sorenson, along with other Nebraska educators, made a second trip to Lake Success, the original UN workshop grew into a project of international importance.

To be on exhibit in Love Memorial Library this summer will be the UN Display featuring pictorial information about the UN and all member nations. The UN will also establish a Materials Center at the University to include a stock of films, slides, books, recordings, posters, pamphlets and other printed materials about the United Nations.

Nebraska has become a pioneer school in a project to inform citizens of the work of the United Nations. United Nations members have expressed the hope that other colleges and universities and state education offices will initiate programs similar to Nebraska's.

What the University hopes to develop through this program: 1. The kind of UN material needed by schools and communities in Nebraska and the middle west; 2. The kind of informational material UN should compile to meet American and foreign school needs; 3. Establishment of a teacher training course for representatives of 54 UN member nations.

We hope that this enterprising project will be continued after the first year at Nebraska and that other schools will follow Nebraska's lead.

Physical education directors of Big Seven member schools will hold their first conference meeting on the University of Nebraska campus next Friday and Saturday.

L. E. Means, physical education director at Nebraska, said Tuesday the meeting will be held in connection with the conference track meet. The directors will consider the broad problem of expanding intramural athletics and campus recreation programs at all the Big Seven schools.

Other topics on the agenda include discussion of physical education courses for both university undergraduate and graduate students; state certification standards; and the status of physical education and recreation programs in communities of states represented at the meeting.

Conference representatives slated to attend are: Colorado, Dean Harry Carlson and Frosty Cox; Iowa State, Louis E. Menze and Harry Schmidt; Kansas State, Prof. L. P. Washburn; Kansas University, Prof. Henry Shenk; Missouri, Dr. Jack Matthews; Nebraska, L. E. Means; and Oklahoma, Prof. Hugh McDermott.
