

Students 'Break Necks' in Support Of University TB X-Ray Survey

BY JACK THORNBURG.

Just put your chin up there. U-m-m, m-m-m, Crack! And there goes another neck in the cause of the TB survey. have X-rayed over 8,000 students. The work is co-ordinated by the use of a walkey-talky in an effort to keep the lines to a minimum and to see that each unit is always busy. The machines were loaned to the university by the TB division of the state department of health.

Each student is required to have a chest X-ray, and those who don't have their's taken now will have to pay for them later. Notices will be sent to everyone whose plate shows any abnormality. The Daily Nebraskan will announce the sending of these notices.

Next week all faculty members, university employes and the wives of students may have free chest X-rays. However, appointments should be made for them.

The X-rays will be examined not only for signs of TB but also for abnormalities of the spine and heart. Any such abnormality will be reported to the student.

The necessity of removing all jackets with pins and other obstructing items before the X-ray is taken gave proof to the fact that this year's dickeys, worn by the weaker sex, are keen, cool and easy to look at.

Alpha Kappa Psi, professional business fraternity, will hold its bi-weekly business meeting 7 p. m. in the Union, Wednesday, Sept. 23.

Frosh Loses Gal at Union Open House; Gets Sore Foot

Maybe it was a different kind of "open house" at the Student Union Friday night 'cause I had to push awfully hard on the door marked PULL in order to get in.

As I laid the door gently on the sidewalk, a girl in a dark uniform greeted me. Very sweetly she said, "Write your name on this card and pin it to your lapel." On the card it said, "Let's get acquainted."

Strange Uniforms.

I kind of figured that I had known myself for quite some time but I didn't have the heart to tell such a fine girl that it seemed like a silly thing to do. I was curious about her uniform but when I asked her about it there were several other students around her so I couldn't quite hear her reply. I think she said something connected with motor boats—I guessed it was a type of naval girl scout organization.

She said there was a dance in the ballroom, so I went up. All the archways were crowded with fellows watching someone, probably a girl. About a half an hour later, I saw a girl myself; so, I rushed up to her and said, "Would you—could I—may I—do you have—let's dance!"

We pardoned our way onto the floor and were surprised to see that the stag line had not taken up the whole floor. I noticed that she was wearing one of those cards on her dress; her name was Flo Onwater, awfully poetic, I thought. As she slyly slipped her feet out from under mine, she said innocently, "Have you ever danced before?" "Not really, I mean not with a girl," I said, blushing boyfully, "I've just taken some lessons—by correspondence this summer and I couldn't find anyone to practice with. It was a very good course, though; only thing is I couldn't figure out those little diagrams showing which foot to move next." She smiled understandingly and led me off the floor, limping gracefully.

She thanked me for the dance and said she would see me later. I don't know what happened because I didn't see her again. But the insurance company will find her. I've got a policy and they'll find someone to pay for my broken foot. Because of this incident I've got another policy—don't dance with strange Amazons.
