

Humming Bird Sex Life Lulls Student Into Hypnotic Sleep

"Once upon a morning dreary, while I pondered weak and weary, intensely over a volume of forgotten lore, while I nodded nearly napping there came a gentle tapping, tapping, and my classmate began an ugly snore."

And why shouldn't he? Miss Garfinkle McNoot was lecturing to her class on the sex life of a male humming bird. This would have ordinarily proved very interesting but Miss McNoot had lulled us all into a queer sort of hypnotic sleep.

Voice Carries On

Her voice went on . . . "and so you see, even a humming bird has desire for family life . . . in fact he gets a buzz out of it like anybody else." "Tee-hee." This only deepened my classmate's snore from the gentle sucking noise of water going down a drain to the delicate roar of a male lion as he springs for the kill.

But that is only one type of teacher that my classmate and I have to suffer through.

Hale and Hearty Type

There is always the hale and hearty type who always likes to start his class off on the wrong foot by telling an anecdote. (After they've heard the joke they need an antidote, not an anecdote.) For instance, "one boy stuck a drill into another boy and said, 'Am I boring you?'"

Then there is the speech instructor.

You go to class with a 20 minute speech which you have spent three hours on. You are all excited and emotionally geared to go up before the class to talk for 20 minutes on a subject which could not possibly take more than a paragraph. You are eager to go . . . to talk your way through to a possible 5 if you are lucky. Cold, clammy perspiration gathers on your hands . . . it's now or never to give your speech on "How I Spent the Summer" or "Why I Believe in Democracy" . . . well, it's never—'cause Mr. Frank Flappinglips, the speech instructor, gives a dynamic lecture on speech. This goes on from day to day . . . ad infinitum. Never before have you talked so little and listened so much.

Few Listen

At the end of the day you go home, put on a suit and spend all night painting the town red. What about sleep . . . did you say . . . why I've been sleeping all day.

You'll have to excuse me, I've got to go for an hour snooze in psychology now.

Faculty Notes

BY JACK THORNBURG.

Something new has been added to the Rag. This is it. "Faculty Notes" will appear twice a week and will deal with the doings of the university faculty, their assistants, and even an occasional graduate student.

We will be most interested in books and research, but we hope to find a place for anything that is unusual and interesting. It is hoped that this column will give us all a chance to know our university better, and to get a better idea of the work of our instructors.

Dr. Alexis, for instance, is devoting his spare time to the study of the Russian language. This is a big year in the history of Russian at the university, for this is the first time that two years of Russian have been offered and therefore the first time that the language requirement could be met in this language.

Dr. Alexis points out that Russian is increasingly important due to our strained relations with the USSR. It may surprise many of our readers to learn that while the Russians use Russian interpreters, we are forced to use Russians as Russian interpreters, due to the shortage of Americans who know the Russian language.

Dr. Alexis believes that it is very important that our colleges and universities to do something about this shortage, and is doing his part to eliminate it.

Extension Division to Show Audubon Society Pictures

By Fran Hanson

A series of natural history and conservation lectures will be presented to university students by the extension division in cooperation with the National Audubon Society.

The National Audubon society, co-sponsor of this series, is an organization devoted to arousing public appreciation of the value and need of conservation of soil, water and wildlife and the relation of these values and needs to human welfare. The NAS is bringing this group of lectures and motion pictures to Lincoln and one hundred other cities in the United States and Canada to promote interest in wildlife protection, wise use of natural resources and conservation education.

Series to Present Movies

The series, known as the Audubon Screen Tours, brings to students and Lincoln residents an opportunity to see top quality color motion pictures of American scenery and wildlife, presented by the nation's outstanding nature lecturers. The programs will be given in Love library auditorium beginning Oct. 15 and continuing until May 10.

Pettingill to Present First Film

Olin S. Pettingill jr., one of the world's foremost natural scientists, will present a film, "Wilderness Mischief" in the opening lecture, Friday, Oct. 15. This film, taken in northern Michigan, reveals the "busy life, the complexities and the fun that are to be found in the wilderness."

The second of the series will be a lecture by Alexander Sprunt jr. with an all-color film, "From Coast to Crest." This film combines some of the most skillful bird and scenic photography ever taken with glimpses of flowers, mammals and insects for variety.

Third Film Made at Night

Howard Cleaves, expert in wild life photography, brings to the public the mysterious happening in the wilderness after sunset. The title of this film is "Midnight Movies in Animaland." This lecture will be given Monday, Feb. 7.

The fourth of these wildlife tours, to be given on Friday, April 8, will take the audience to a motion picture "symphony" of the out-of-doors.

Allen to Imitate Birds

The concluding lecture will be a motion picture, "Sounds of the Sageland," with interpretations of sageland sounds by Alice and Harold Allen. Mr. Allen will imitate many of the bird sounds familiar to those who know "the land of the sage."

Season tickets for the Audubon Screen Tours are available Friday afternoon from 1-4 p.m. at Love Memorial library on the first floor and at Miller and Paine's, the university bureau of audio-visual instruction and the state museum. Single admission will be sixty cents and a season ticket $2.40.
