

'Racket Smasher' Tells Tricks Of the Trade to Local ASME

"Smashing the Rackets"—a talk by a man who knows whereof he speaks will highlight the next meeting of the A.S.M.E. The student chapter of the American Society of Mechanical Engineers will hear Professor Fredrick J. Ludwig, a member of the Law College faculty, recount his experiences with Murder Inc. and other rackets which he has helped to smash.

The talk, which the professor emphasized is open to all students and not merely to engineers, will be held in Richards lab at 8:00 p. m., Wednesday, Nov. 17.

Professor Ludwig came to Law College this year from New York District Attorney Frank S. Hogan's office where Gov. Thomas E. Dewey gained his reputation.

The professor's compelling personality plus his unusual subject should make for quite an evening. The former cop, caddy, high school teacher and special counsel promised this reporter a few chills and thrills.

At 30 the new-comer to the faculty is the youngest full professor in the country. He graduated from the Columbia Law school.
