Another Problem...

Basketball season at Nebraska officially opens tonight with the first home game against Northwest Missouri Teachers College.

There has always been a seating problem at basketball games. In past years there has been the problem of not enough seats to accommodate the students attending the games.

All seats in the coliseum are being reserved for students except 1200 general admission seats in the south balcony and 600 faculty seats in the east balcony.

This seems to be a fair way of handling the situation. The athletic department has tried to work out the seating arrangement to the satisfaction of all—students, faculty and public—giving students the advantage.

As I Was Saying...

If you have seen Bud Downing past guest writer of this column, coming out of the men's reformatory lately, he would like it known that he is not an inmate.

Contrary to popular belief, the poll-takers' era is not over. At least not on the Nebraska campus.

Sports highlights are just returning from Oregon and the big football team party staged after the game.
