Chancellor Urges New Accrediting

Chancellor Gustavson Tuesday urged the Association of American Colleges to join with four other major associations of higher education to simplify accrediting procedures.

Lamenting the present confusion of 40 accrediting agencies, Dr. Gustavson said that the authority of college administrators to run their own institutions is threatened. He commented that these agencies represent many professional and allied fields and may accredit or refuse to accredit training offered by universities and colleges.

He remarked that one college president had already stated that he feels college administrators are increasingly becoming just local representatives for accrediting groups.

Speaking before the Association of American Colleges as chairman of the joint committee on accrediting, Dr. Gustavson proposed formation of a committee of ten, two representatives from each of the five major associations. This committee would determine the basic principles of accrediting which would also serve as tribunal to hear appeals from decisions made by accrediting agencies.

To Enlist Others

The Joint Committee on Accrediting includes representatives from the National Association of State Universities, the Association of Land-Grant Colleges, and the Association of Urban Universities. It now seeks to enlist the membership of the Association of American Colleges and the Association of American Universities.

More Copies On Way

Miss Flood and her assistants, by Tuesday afternoon, were casting anxious eyes at the Cornhusker Printing company for the printing of additional Student Directories. The printer was turning out about 200 every few hours, Miss Flood commented, while Foundation members raced back to booths in the Union, Law, Ag, Library, and Sosh, to sell the books.

The red-and-white-covered book contains names, addresses, phone numbers and school years of students, as well as names, addresses, offices, titles and phone numbers of faculty and administrative personnel. They are selling for 50c a copy.

Directory Delayed

The 1948-49 editions of the Directory has caused considerable campus comment because of its delay in reaching students. The Foundation had promised it for sale by Christmas vacation when the Cornhusker Printing company had contracted it for completion.
