

A Part of Education . . .

Ag students got a better idea of what education really is at their convocation yesterday and the coffee hour afterwards. The example set by Ag college should be heeded by the convocations committee on the city campus and the reasons for the huge success yesterday on Ag campus should be well considered.

Long the convocations committee has been bemoaning the fact that though it brings top speakers representing the best thought of the ages, students just did not take the trouble to turn out in any large numbers. The committee contends, and it is right, that the thoughts that are brought here by visiting lecturers are important to the well-rounded education that all students are theoretically here to acquire. Then why do convocations fail to attract these students?

Inadequate publicity has often been advanced as the reason for poor attendance. "Got to study" is the common excuse offered by non-attending students. Perhaps these reasons are applicable to the situation. But reasons go further than this. The following suggestions are offered to the convocations committee:

(1) If the convocations hour could be set at some other time, perhaps more students would feel that they could attend. When convocations begin at the present hour of 11 a. m., speakers often lecture into the noon hour. Students are compelled either to miss regularly scheduled lunches and grab a bite at the Crib, or leave before the speaker is finished. Also, crowds coming into the Union about 11:45 make enough confusion that the speaker is often bothered. If convocations could be scheduled at some different hour, these objectionable features might be eliminated.

(2) If professors would have a better attitude toward letting students miss classes, students would feel more free to judge for themselves whether they would get more out of the professor's lecture for the day or from a speaker who is a widely recognized authority in some field.

(3) If more informal coffee hours could be conducted after the convocation lecture, as was held at Ag college, students could inquire further into some of the points brought out in the lecture. Very often, a lecture will only open up many roads of thought which could be developed more fully in a personal discussion. Although the University is large, this may be one way to bring about the more personal type of broad education enjoyed by smaller colleges, since only a small group of extremely interested people would remain for these conversation periods.

Convocations should be a large part of our education. More students should make use of them and plans should be made whereby more students may have the opportunity of attending them.

J. Paul Sheedy* Switched to Wildroot Cream-Oil Because He Flunked The Finger-Nail Test

IF PEOPLE are whiskering about you, better check up on your hair. Before J.P. switched to Wildroot Cream-Oil hair tonic, he was wide open for all kinds of catty remarks about his ratty appearance. Not so today! Now that he's using Wildroot Cream-Oil regularly, annoying dryness and loose, ugly dandruff are gone. His hair stays put all day. He can pass the Wildroot Finger-Nail Test without batting an eye.

J.P.'s experience leads us to suggest that you try non-alcoholic Wildroot Cream-Oil containing Lanolin, too. Get yourself a bottle or tube today at your drug or toilet goods counter. And, have your barber give you professional applications. You'll agree that for well-groomed hair Wildroot Cream-Oil is purr-fect!

And it's a wonder I can get a word in edgewise with someone on the staff asking, "Who is it?" in big, black letters. My guess is another campus queen election in the offering or maybe we're about to find out who the masqued-ade is. Just asked Bob Axtell who smiled wisely and said, "I cannot divulge that information. — So the secret's out. I suggest that interested parties ply him with some in season beverage — like lemonade.

Meddling With Melick

By M. J.

While attending last night's Council meeting, we picked up a bit of information which seemed particularly ridiculous to us. In spite of its almost laughable nature the statement was only too true. It seems to us to typify faculty attitude.

After a number of Council members, quite a sizeable number, had gone home to dinner the meeting degenerated into a battle of with between several Council members and the faculty sponsor. Undoubtedly the faculty sponsor was put in an unfair position, that of justifying the acts and attitudes of the entire faculty. This spot is similar to the relationship which the faculty has created between the Council and the faculty.

During the discussion a report was submitted by the joint committee which sponsored the student hearing. In a portion of the report students asked for an open hearing with the faculty senate.

At this point the faculty sponsor, who had been discussing the uncooperative attitude which students take toward the faculty, rose to say that such a hearing would be impossible. She pointed out that faculty members do not attend Senate meetings in great numbers. She added that the faculty Senate was too busy to be annoyed with "trivial matters" and for that reason the committee on social functions, and so on ad nauseam, was set up as a buffer.

It seems a trifle peculiar to us that the faculty should expect ten thousand students to do handstands at its request to revise student politics but it cannot be bothered with hearing the student side of such "trivial matters."

We beg to remind the faculty that this was their idea. We are in complete harmony with the suggestion and so are a number of Council members but it does not alter the fact that the whole project was faculty initiated.

Perhaps students have been uncooperative in their attitude towards the faculty, but it seems a poor excuse for the faculty to match that attitude. We realize that the members of the Faculty Senate are busy people. We wish to remind them that students are also busy people.

Are we completely out of line when we expect the faculty to devote a few minutes to hearing both sides of its own brain child?
