

Baptist Students Create Active Religious Program

Though one of the smaller religious groups on campus, the Baptist Student Fellowship provides an active program with the student house as the center.

A project now in the limelight is a waffle supper. The supper is an annual affair which provides expenses for sending delegates to summer camps and meetings. Baptist students annually attend the summer assembly at Green Lake, Wis., and the Estes Park conference.

SUMMER SERVICE projects are also a part of the program. Under this plan, students work in one of four communities during the summer to gain experience and observe the methods used in the various occupations. Hulett, Wyo., is the "center for rural

Students Offered Institutional Jobs

Possibilities for student work in state mental and correctional institutions will be discussed at a meeting at 3 p. m. in the Union, Wednesday.

George Willoughby, regional representative for the American Friends Service committee, will meet with interested students to explain the possibilities for work in state institutions this summer.

The program is already in operation in several states. It is especially designed for students interested in social work. In addition to helping to relieve a serious personnel shortage it gives undergraduate students "an opportunity for first hand contact with 'people in trouble.'" studies, and industrial studies are made at Weirton, W. Va. Students also are sent to Harlem, N. Y., and Puerto Rico to "work and observe".

Under the direction of Rev. C. B. Howells, Sunday evening discussions are conducted on the theme "The Church at Work in the World." "In our discussions, we try to keep in mind the place of the university in the world," says Rev. Howells.

THE STUDENT House, established in 1920, is equipped with a recreation room in the basement, where students may spend free hours.

Always popular are the semi-monthly parties. Square dances rate high, with skating and bowling parties running close in popularity.

In addition to the single students program, the "Golden Band" provides a program for married students. Meeting on Saturday nights, the group has a variety of activities including frequent covered dish suppers.
