NU Gridders Hold Session On Defense

Coach Bill Glassford continued his stress on defense Tuesday afternoon as he sent his Husker footballers through another two-hour session of fundamentals and defensive work.

The workout started with a session on fundamentals with the coaches taking the different positions and running them through their paces. Sam Vacanti had three backfields working on ball handling and starting.

Defense came in for a good working over as the linemen were worked individually against full teams to brush up on their defensive play. This week is the first that Coach Glassford has worked on defense and he plans to continue it for a few weeks.

Two groups were formed from the varsity and sent into a scrimmage. One group went on offense against the blue shirts while the other unit went through a stiff scrimmage on defense against the single wing formation.

The final part of the workout was put in on punt returns and working the ends on getting down the field.

Coach Glassford has scheduled a big scrimmage for Saturday at 2 p. m. on the freshman field. Part of the squad will be put on defense and part on offense.

All certified Red Cross water safety instructors are asked by Bob Phelps, Daily Nebraskan Sports Editor, to report to the Nebraskan office sometime this week. The meeting will be concerned with the water safety class which starts Monday.
