A Need For I.S.A.

Monday I was over at the Coliseum helping with the drawing for football tickets. Lots of students came through the line to draw for tickets, some with friends, some alone.

What amazed me particularly were the number of students who came through the line and only bought a single ticket. There was something a little tragic to me in those students. To me, a football game isn't half as much fun unless you go with somebody. Maybe my point of view is warped, but I would rather sit behind the end zone with friends than sit alone on the fifty-yard line.

I realize, of course, that many of these students came from small towns, or from out of town, and hadn't had a chance to get acquainted with their fellow students. No doubt, many of them will have friends before the semester is over. But then, there are others who really need some kind of an organization in which they can meet people. For going to college is more than just studying. Studying is the thing for which we all come to college, but no person, however smart, can really be a success in later life without some of the social graces.

Many freshmen come to college alone, shy and scared. There is no reason why they should remain that way. There is, as I see it, a genuine need for a strong independent organization on campus. Fraternities cannot possibly accept all the deserving people on campus, beside the fact that many students, for just as many reasons, do not choose to join fraternities. Co-op houses and religious houses, on campus, as well as various independent social groups, have bridged the gap for many students, but still a great number, perhaps a majority, do not belong to any organized social group on campus. And that, I think, is a great tragedy.

Last year, the Independents' Students association on the University nearly folded and died. For the life of me, I can't understand the reason. I am sure that there are any number of students on this campus who need some kind of a social organization. They may need to be prodded a little, perhaps, but every college student should associate with his fellow students. The Cosmopolitan club fills such a need for the foreign students.

Somehow, some way should be found to bring these students who are sitting alone together. Life is too short to spend all your time in studying. There is a definite need for I.S.A. or some similar group.

The West Point Story

A great deal has been written and said about the scandal at West Point, where about 90 cadets were expelled for violations of the academy's age-old honor system. In talking with various people of my acquaintance and listening to various discussions about the subject, it seems clear that by and large, the public sympathizes with the expelled football players.

I find my feelings somewhat mixed on the subject. On the one hand, the students were well aware that they were supposed to abide by the honor code. Their tenure in the academy was dependent upon their abiding by the rules of the institution, whether these rules be right or wrong.

The honor code was based upon a century-old tradition at the Point. Certainly honor has a place in all institutions of higher learning as well as in every-day life. One should certainly be able to trust his fellow men in all his dealings. However, human beings are cursed creatures and don't always fit into the idealistic pattern laid down for them. Using the same tests repeatedly was rather throwing temptation in the path of players and other students alike.

The pressure for a winning football team apparently grew so great that there was not time for the average player to go to school and compete as a team member at the same time. The same phenomena has become apparent at many other colleges and universities throughout the nation. Schools are required by alumni pressure to have a winning football team at the expense of the rest of its academic program. There is a need for de-emphasis of football, not only at West Point, but at a great many other institutions of higher learning throughout the country.

One of the most amazing reactions has been the great public sympathy for the expelled players. A Town Meeting of the Air broadcast carried the views of leading educators and of the expelled captain of the football team on the subject. The audience applauded the views of the captain with much more fervor than those of the educator who favored de-emphasis of football.

Most of the players will find new educational homes in other colleges, including several Big Seven schools. Certainly they deserve a second chance, for no one should be branded for life for a mistake which they have made. It is only through repetition that a mistake becomes intolerable.

There is no clear-cut answer to the problem posed by the West Point incident. Maybe the system was wrong, and maybe the players were wrong, or maybe both were at fault. Maybe it indicates a decline in national morals, although I doubt it. It does point up one glaring fact: big time football, like the atom bomb, has become a giant on the national scene. How are we going to control it?

Ag Union Plans Fall Open House

Greetings, folks! Well, here we are back for another year. And right with us is the Ag Union, which is now running at full speed.

Ag Union activities director Hollis Eggers is now planning its open house, which is to be held Saturday, Sept. 22. The same day the faculty-student reception for Ag college will be held in the Ag Union.

Here is a chance for Ag students to look over their Ag Union, get acquainted with their fellow students and meet their faculty all at the same time.

This doesn't mean that you should keep away from the Ag Union until next Saturday, because everyone is welcome there at all times.

The new parking system has made faculty parking lots separate from the student parking lots. On Ag campus it seems to have taken up plenty of space, leaving only one parking lot on the west side.

Also, as a part of the program to relieve parking problems at Ag college, some of the streets are practically cluttered with signs which repeat themselves. If people are going to park by a no parking sign, another no parking sign near by isn't going to help much.

If Ag students are going to get started off right, one of the first things they have to get to work on is the Ag Council. Much progress was made last year when the new type of government was voted in, but it still has a long way to go.

The Ag college building program is expanding. Many are hoping that the Agronomy building will be done before second semester, and construction has started on the new Meats Laboratory. Also, the Dairy barn is getting done over on the inside. Bye for now. See you soon in the Ag Union.

Gains And Losses

Three scarlet and cream clad coed cheerleaders added a spark to the rally Sunday that was lacking in last year's cheering parties. The return debut of women on the Yell Squad seemed to gain approval of Cornhusker fans. But shadowing the new spark was the noticeable absence of some quality necessary for an enthusiastic and successful pep rally.

Maybe it was the recent injury of Nebraska's All American Bobby Reynolds. Or perhaps the fact that too many fans were disappointed at not seeing the entire team, rather than just two representatives. Maybe it was because this was the first appearance of the new Yell Squad. Anyone in a similar situation would have a few jittery minutes—even if one had spent the previous year leading Cornhusker cheers. It's probably like the first seconds of a solo or speech.

At any rate, the rally lacked something, and this is no reason to have damp pep rallies. A blow has been dealt the Huskers even before football season. Sidelineing of the star player would dampen anyone's hopes, but there's still a great team in practice; Bobby will play later; and we still ought to have more enthusiasm than was shown Sunday.

The kids didn't lack enthusiasm; and this is about the first time in years The Nebraskan does not have cause to write a traditional "school spirit" editorial. However, some other element was gone. Maybe will find it in future rallies.

Enforcing the Law

NOT A TICKET . . . Officials apply a parking sticker to a University student's car to show that he has received his permit and is allowed to park on the campus. Cars parked on campus without stickers will be fined beginning Friday. The stickers can be obtained this week by presenting the parking permit to the officials by the Social Science building.

Kosmet Klub Pepsters Begin Season Plans Party For Pledges

Sophomore men interested in becoming pledges to Kosmet Klub, campus dramatic group, are urged to attend the Klub's annual smoker tonight at 7 p.m. in Room 316 of the Union.

Jerry Johnson, president, stated that all independent men and two representatives from each organized house who wish to serve as workers this year will hear talks by active members explaining the purpose of the Klub and also have an opportunity to understand how they may become members.

Kosmet Klub sponsors, each year, a Fall Revue, featuring six or seven skits from several fraternities, and presents at that time Prince Kosmet and the Nebraska Sweetheart both selected in a popular vote.

In the spring, the group presents a musical which includes both male and female participants. Last year, coeds were allowed to take part in spring production after a lapse of ten years. Up to that time, only men were allowed to appear in the show.

All active members must be present at the smoker, stated Johnson. A short business meeting will follow.

Pepsters Begin Season

Three hundred fifty-two freshmen will be members of the Pepsters. The first 176 independent students to sign up for Pepsters will become automatic members. Organized houses may select their members.

This is the Pepsters' third year on the campus. The group has

Matzke Plans NUCWA Meet

Nebraska University Council for World Affairs will hold its first fall meeting Thursday at 7 p.m. in the Union, Room 316.

Vice president Gerald Matzke will preside at the meeting. Dr. Frank Sorenson will give a brief explanation of the scope of NUCWA and introduce Virginia Koehler who will give a report on her trip to the United Nations.

Nominations and election of officers for the coming school year will complete the evening's agenda. A president, vice president, secretary and treasurer must be selected. Anyone holding membership last year and new members are entitled to vote.

Membership registration for the year is $1. Students interested in the collegiate aspect of international affairs are invited to attend the meeting. Members will have the opportunity to stage and observe UN Day and Week in October and the annual Model UN conference this spring.

Historical Society To Enter New Home In Spring Of '53

The excavation east of the Union marks the future home of the Nebraska State Historical Society. James C. Olson, superintendent of the society, stated that the building should be ready for occupancy in the spring of 1953.

The building which will face the state capitol will house the museum, library, and administrative offices of the historical society.

Using modernistic architecture, the building will be constructed of Indiana limestone. This material is familiar to University students for it has been used to trim Love library and the Union.

The new home of the historical society will have two full stories and a basement. The present location of the society is the first floor of the state capitol building.

University students and faculty members will have full use of the facilities of the new building for it will be open to the public. It will have a complete library in Nebraska and western history in addition to a large anthropological collection.

The historical society acquired the building site in an exchange of property with the University board of regents. The University now has the title to property located just east of the state capitol.

The Nebraska State Historical Society is a state supported public institution governed by a board of 16 members. Twelve are elected by the justice and the governor, chief justice of the state supreme court, the chancellor, and the president of the state trust association complete the board.

'Don Juan' Stars Boyer, Moorehead

By Jane Randall

It's the real deal—and a four-sorry to disappoint you, but that bridge game is out. "Don Juan in Hell," George Bernard Shaw's play is taking its place—Sept. 25 at the University Coliseum.

That foursome is the First Drama Quartette. It includes Charles Boyer, Agnes Moorehead, Sir Cedric Hardwicke and Charles Laughton, all of whom play leading roles in the production.

Originally written as a part of "Man and Superman," "Don Juan in Hell" concerns an unconventional lover—Charles Boyer—who is in pursuit of the object of his affections—Agnes Moorehead.

Boyer, in the title role of this unconventional lover, came to the United States from France in 1930, not knowing a word of English. Since then, he has gained, through such films as "Gaslight," "Cluny Brown" and "Tovarich," a reputation for his versatility and romanticism.

His fame fully established in Hollywood, Boyer has spent a considerable amount of his own time and fortune on the French Research Foundation. This organization is dedicated to the furthering of Franco-American cultural relations.

Boyer's leading lady, Agnes Moorehead, who plays the role of Donna Anna, is also a veteran of Hollywood films. She has appeared in over 20 of them. Miss Moorehead is also remembered for her radio role in "Sorry, Wrong Number," a drama which has been presented more times over the air waves than any other play of its kind.

Before going into her present dramatic career, Miss Moorehead was an instructor in public speaking in a Wisconsin high school. Since then, she has received a great many honors, one of them being the New York film critics' award for her work in "Magnificent Ambersons."

Price of student tickets is 90 cents. They are on sale now and may be purchased at a booth in the Union or from campus salesmen. These student seats will be located in the south balcony of the Coliseum. This allows complete view of the dramatic action.

Student Directory Plans Announced By Kennedy

Work on the 1951-52 Student Directory is underway, announced Lou Kennedy, editor of the Builders' project.

Builders' workers are proof-reading 5,000 cards which were filled out by upperclassmen for fall registration.

"With the cooperation of students and faculty," said Miss Kennedy, "the Directory will be bigger and better than ever."
