

From Beer To Coyote Pelts—Many Odd Items Unclaimed At Union Check Stand

If one discounts the gathering and eating places in the Union, then the most popular place in the whole building would probably be the Union check stand.

Duane Lake, director-manager of the Union, says that a survey of game equipment checked out and of general checking in and out was made last winter. The survey showed that game equipment was checked out approximately 200 times a day and general checking added up to around 1,200 times a day.

Lake commented that many items checked daily are never picked up by their owners. Every night, a list is made of the articles that have been checked that day and have not been claimed. A green tag is placed above these articles, showing the date the article was checked. If the owner of the article does not claim it after two weeks, it is put on a separate shelf.

"Many strange articles," says Lake, "have been checked in the Union. He said that one time a young student checked a big covered box. The box was not claimed and after a few days, the check room attendant noticed a strange odor emanating from somewhere in the room. After searching the room carefully, they finally narrowed down the place where the smell was emanating—the box. It turned out that the box contained some coyote hides wrapped and stuffed in the box.

One of the most valuable items that has ever been left unclaimed, said Mr. Lake, was a fur coat. The coat had no identification other than the label of the store where the coat had been purchased. The Union not knowing the origin of the coat or whether it was stolen goods, wrote the store.

The store wrote that the coat was purchased by Mrs. X. It turned out that Mrs. X had left her coat in the check room during a convention in the Union and had forgotten all about it. In fact, she thought the coat had been left at the Omaha fur store where she had originally purchased it.

Scarves and mittens are lost more frequently than any other article. However, there are always glasses and binoculars that are either lost or left unclaimed.

Lake said that though students lose or misplace their books all year around, there is usually an influx of students who want to find their books during mid-semester or at the semester's end.

An embarrassing incident happened to a young man who checked a big cardboard box in the check room last spring, said Lake. The box was covered and because of its weight, the check room attendant accidentally tipped it over and its contents dropped out. It contained three six-packs of beer.

Included in the temporarily or permanent unclaimed items have been things from footballs to wrestling gear. One young man even left a double barreled shot gun unclaimed in the check room for a few days. The gun had been used in a skit performed in the Union.

Wearing apparel is also left in the Union check room, sometimes permanently unclaimed. Everything from trousers to skirts and socks is left in the check room.

At the end of each year, unclaimed articles, whether checked or turned in as lost, are given to the central University lost and found. Lake said that at the end of last summer, the Union check room had over three huge cardboard boxes of lost or unclaimed articles carted to the central lost and found.

Lost or found, claimed or unclaimed, the Union check room can never be considered dull. There's a story behind every lost or unclaimed article.

Builders Hold First Annual Yuletide Party

"A Year in the Life of a Builders Worker" and "A Little Christmas" were dramatically mixed Wednesday night at the University Builders' annual Christmas party in Union Parlors XYZ.

The theme of the party was built around a year in Builders, although the program included Christmas numbers.

Barbara Bell and Sue Brownlee dramatized a Builders style of "The Night Before Christmas," while Janelle Mohr and a Kappa Sigma duet provided music.

Miss Mohr, accompanied by Sherry Clover, sang "O Holy Night." The duet, "Baby, It's Cold Outside," was sung by Jack Davis and Jack Gardner.

NU Alum Is First Woman To Visit Juneau Ice Cap

Rumor has it that the earth has been almost completely explored and visited.

Mrs. Lois Reedy, 1940 University graduate, claims the honor of being the first woman to visit the Juneau ice cap in Alaska.

Mrs. Reedy moved to Juneau in 1948 with her husband, who is a hydrologist with the bureau of reclamation. He and five fellow scientists are studying the past growth and recession of the ice cap and its glaciers.

The men, a glaciologist, geologists, weathermen and doctor, are learning about weather in the past, and possibly, more about weather in the future, from the ice cap formation.

The project is in its fourth year. Maynard Miller, glaciologist, heads the activity which is sponsored by the Juneau Ice Research Project.

Mrs. Reedy struggled into approximately 10 pounds of borrowed clothing for her journey.

Home Ec Christmas Tea To Honor Japanese Coed

The annual Home Economics club Christmas tea will be held Thursday at 4 p.m., in the Home Ec parlors.

The tea will honor Akiko Terashima, Japanese girl attending the College of Agriculture. Janette Burema, Ag student from Holland, will give a talk on Christmas customs in her homeland.

The Christmas theme will be carried out in decorations and refreshments. Elizabeth Gass is in charge of the tea.

Her destination on the cap was furnished with two tents, a gasoline stove and other minimum necessities needed for the scientific work.

The trip was about 30 miles from Juneau and a 30 minute ride by ski plane.

"From the air," said Mrs. Reedy, "it made me think of the moon. The vastness of it and emptiness and whiteness and only two specks that were tents."

The plane flew over mountains, woods, glaciers, a giant mountain-bound cap of ice and skied to a stop on the ice cap.

The cap is a 300-foot-deep mass of snow. Weather information for more than 7,000 years is buried in pollen and ancient wood.

Mrs. Reedy made the trip to take chocolate chip cookies to the workers. When she arrived, the men made their guest a cup of coffee by pouring boiling water over powdered coffee.

The group took pictures of the first woman to visit Juneau cap. Looking down from the cap, Mrs. Reedy described the scene as a glaring white mirror on the mountain and below, glaring snow with clear sky above.

Not everyone may claim a "first" title as Mrs. Reedy, but for adventurous souls, the earth still has regions to visit, explore and tell about.

Ten years ago, $150 was stolen from the Alpha Chi Omega, Sigma Delta Tau and Sigma Phi Epsilon houses.
