'Race To Altar' Affects Most College Students

With the advent of spring, another yearly phenomenon has appeared—blushing and excited brides and grooms to be.

This writer, at the ripe old age of 22, is beginning to feel like a confirmed bachelor. He finds himself, along with one other lonely soul, the only one of his high school crowd who isn't fatally entangled romantically.

It is rather odd to see the people who once ran around with interested primarily in the price of groceries, the quality of their wives' cooking or the best way to change a diaper. Those who once were wilder are now being led about by a ring in the nose.

Many more people are contemplating the fatal step within a few weeks. Many girls can now call their University education a success—they got a man. One cannot help shedding a tear for the poor females who ended their education with mantrap empty.

For some University coeds, the end of college means the beginning of a career—for the time being.

For men, college may mean the beginning of being a one-woman man after going with a succession of women. It may also mean that he stays home at night, for the first time in years.

What is most amusing is to see a burly ex-athlete cooling about the prowess of his seven-pound, six-ounce child. How time changes things.

But, marriage is probably inevitable for most college students. After all, the race (to the altar, as well as the other kind) must go on.

Colbert Explains Student Rights Under Selective Service Law

Prof. J. P. Colbert, director of the University's veterans and selective service affairs, is certain a great many students have only a vague notion of their own rights under the Selective Service Law.

And Colbert should know. Each week day from 9 a.m. until 4 p.m. and on Saturdays from 9 a.m. until noon his office in 106 Mechanical Arts hall receives inquiries from students about their draft status. If students have questions, that's the place to ask them.

In an effort to help male students understand their position under the Selective Service Law, Colbert provides the following general information.

First of all, the law requires all young men to register with their local Selective Service (draft) boards when they reach the age of 18. When they register they become part of the nation's military manpower pool, subject to induction into the armed forces when reaching the age of 18½.

This does not mean, of course, that every young man will be inducted at the age of 18½. The law gives the local draft boards authority to decide which young men shall be called in keeping with the rules and regulations of the Selective Service System. The law also makes a few directions of its own, including one which applies specifically to students.

This specific direction says that any registrant who is a full-time student (12 semester hours or more) doing satisfactory work SHALL be deferred IF he makes a request for deferment to his local board.

Such deferments are called "statutory deferments" and are good only until the end of the academic year in which they are given.

When and how should a student request a statutory deferment? The best general answer to that question is this: When he receives an order from his local draft board to report for a pre-induction physical examination, he should go to Colbert's office and tell him whether he wishes to ask for a statutory deferment. If he does, Colbert will help, the student makes the request; if he does not, his office should know that too.

Statutory deferments are given only once, that is, for one academic year only. Thus, the freshman student, for example, who has obtained a statutory deferment during the school year would be subject to induction at the end of the school year. The law, however, suggests to local draft boards that they give consideration to granting additional deferment to outstanding students.

Under this arrangement, the student whose statutory deferment has expired but who is not called for induction during the summer may be deferred to continue his schooling. The decision is made by the local draft board.

In order to give the local draft board some basis for deciding which students should be deferred beyond the automatic statutory period, the Selective Service System has set up the college qualification test program. The qualification tests, given from time to time, are open to all student registrants but the test may be taken only once.

The results of the test are sent to local draft boards. In addition to considering the results of the tests, the local draft boards also consider the registrant's scholastic standing. The local boards will not even consider granting an additional student deferment unless the registrant meets the following requirements:

1. Makes a request in writing for such deferment. (This is a request in addition to one made for statutory deferment.)

2. Is carrying a full-time course and ranks in the upper one-half of his college class if a freshman; the upper two-thirds if a sophomore; and in the upper three-fourths if a junior or senior. Graduate students or students in medicine, dentistry and pharmacy must be doing satisfactory work in their fields to be considered.

So far, local draft boards have been lenient in granting deferments on grounds of scholarship and if a student wishes to request one he should contact Colbert's office. Whether local boards will tighten up scholastic requirements probably depends upon whether the need of the armed forces for men increases.

In addition to the statutory deferment and the deferment on grounds of scholarship, there is still another avenue upon which a student may seek deferment. This third avenue provides for deferment of certain students who are enrolled in the reserve officers training program: army, navy or air. A student acceptable to the ROTC program may be deferred until he graduates, provided he signs an agreement with the Federal government. In signing such an agreement he promises:

1. To complete his advanced ROTC course if accepted by the ROTC for advanced training.

2. To serve on active duty as a commissioned officer for not less than two years, if so ordered.

3. To remain in the armed forces' reserve program for eight years. Continued deferment under the ROTC program is, of course, contingent upon his continued good work in ROTC training.

If students have questions about deferment, go to Colbert's office. As has always been true, the office of student affairs in Administration hall is prepared to write letters of request and certification to local draft boards. The office of Selective Service (Colbert's) however, prepares and submits the official scholastic forms required by Selective Service.

Free Coffee Brings Comments From Students, Crib Waiters

By AGNES ANDERSON

The best things in life are free! It does happen every now and then. And it has happened here.

For Thursday the Crib locked its cash register to all coffee orders. The doors were crowded with thirsty students and the booths were filled with coffee lovers.

The Crib has a new coffee maker. The automatic coffee pot can make twelve cups of coffee in three minutes. It is supposed to be superior to every other type of machine because of its speed and efficiency.

added convenience. The kitchen man was rushed with all of the unwashed cups. He was busy trying to keep up with "rushed" orders. The fountain man had the easy job. The scene had changed.

The waiters in the Crib have suffered and benefited by this from cokes to coffee.

A card was given to each customer so that he might state his choice of the coffee's strength. He could check if he thought the coffee was "strong," "weak," or just "perfect." In this way the Crib staff will know what the majority liked and brew it to suit them.
