Editorial Comment:

Fidel Has No Good Answers

Names Plague Iowa Cyclones

We have been a little too concerned for the past couple of weeks about the attempt by five lonely men in the Legislature to start a revolution, to consider the doings of a bona-fide, successful revolutionary in the U.S.

We refer, of course, to "Fidelito"-old Fidel himself, who has been stomping up and down the east coast flirting with caged tigers and a free press.

Fidel Castro, the revolutionary hero of Cuba, has created a storm of applause among Americans during his tour that has, unfortunately, drowned out the distant mutterings of thunder in the island land which he governs.

Now, no one is going to hack Fidel for banishing the batista regime, which was a bit too autocratic for the U.S. to maintain, a scant 100 or so miles off its southernmost tip, without some embarrass-

At the same time, Americans should be a little cautious about opening the gates to Batista's successor. America has always loved the man of action and daring-so much so that they sometimes tend to forget that people like Stalin started out as revolutionaries too.

We tend to forget to ask the questions

Every campus has its peculiar problems. Iowa State College has one presently that's a lulu. It involves the very

Recently, the legislature in Iowa changed the name of Iowa State College to Iowa State University of Science and Technology. This elicited the following editorial comment from the Daily Iowan, student organ of the State University of Iowa for football and incidental academic subjects (the one that goes to the Rose

CHEERLEADER: "All right you Cyclone fans, let's spell it out. Who do you

FANS (obediently): "I-O-W-A S-T-A-T-E

CHEERLEADER: "What's that again?"

FANS (not obediently): "G-O N-E-

FIRST FAN: "Go Nebraska? I thought

SECOND FAN: "No, no. Michigan is playing at Iowa City against the State University of Iowa. Iowa State University of Science and Technology is playing Ne-

FIRST FAN: "Oh, I wondered where the

And So, confusion will reign at Ames this fall. We can hear the leader of the wa State University of Science an

LEADER (tearing at non-existent hair):

"No, no, no. The tuba section forms the

"TECH" and you trombonists belong in

Thus the troubles at Ames will mount.

Football lettermen will sport purple and gold I-S-U-S-T sweaters and megaphones will have to be of the six foot variety in order to accommodate the necessary

Technology Marching Band now:

U-N-I-V-E-R-S-I-T-Y O-F S-C-I-E-N-C-E

A-N-D TE-C-H-N-O-L-O-G-Y."

we were playing Michigan."

braska here at Ames."

the "NOLOGY" section.

Bowl all the time, not the one we play.)

name of their school.

root for?"

B-R-A-S-K-A."

crowd was."

ciphers.

that ought to be asked of this kind of people. For instance, the American press has gotten very little out of Castro on the subject of Communism except that "my government is not a Communistic one."

Fidel might have added "yet" to that for his brother Raul, who tends to use guns while Fidel is relying on words, shows some powerful leanings toward the Moscow line. He is probably helped along in this by his bride of less than a year, who, it is reported, still carries her party

Fidel has also come up with nothing substantial in reply to double jeopardy and his "war crimes trials." (Sample: "The people have a right to appeal as much as any criminal.") American business, which has done much for Cuba besides build gambling casinos, has also received the flippant approach. (Sample: "You want to stay here, you pay your 1960 taxes now and we will think about it"-Cuban toughs talking to an American auto dealer as reported by the AP.)

In 1890, Cuba was referred to as the "shame at America's back door." Perhaps in 1960 we will hear of it as "the menace at America's back door."

tumn sunshine the letters I-O-W-A

S-T-A-T-E U-N-I-V-E-R-S-I-T-Y O-F

S-C-I-E-N-C-E A-N-D T-E-C-H-N-O-L-

O-G-Y will ripple across the stadium from

We at SUI are not considerably concerned by the fact that the preponderous name will probably be shortened at some time in the future to Iowa State University. Certainly Iowa's sister school will be even more widely confused in the fu-continue as they have in the past with a clarification something to the effect of

'Oh, you know, the school with the foot-

But what about poor ISUST? We feel that it is our neighborly duty to propose a symbol of distinctiveness that can be used by the Ames residents to identify themselves during the fall months. Thanks to Gregg, think we have come up with the answer. How about something like: "Iowa

State University of Science and Technology, Home of the First and Only Shorthand Football Card Section in the Middle West?" What could be more distinctive

Another Wedding

There's just something about the at-

Now we learn that our star columnist,

Roger Borland, has been secretly married for the past 16 months. This is the second wedding of a Rag staffer revealed under the present regime, which may be

And for the summer, Sellentin has suggested we turn the editor's office into a marriage counseling bureau. Our rates,

Seriously, congratulations to the Bor-

mosphere down here at the office-it

-From The Daily Iowan

ball team."

-and utilitarian?

breeds romance.

an all time record.

of course, will be nominal.

ture. SUI students, however, can merely the five yard line to the five yard line.

LITTLE MAN ON CAMPUS , BREER

-AT LEAST HE'S TRYIN' TO HOLD OUR INTEREST."

The Distillery

This is the story of Jere-my Bean. Jeremy felt very deeply about things and participated with a religious, patriotic ferver in all the noble community causes. He gave up s u nflower seeds during cleanup-fix up week. He wore corktip sneakers in all Borland Spring Day events and campaigned vigorously against checker playing in the janitor's room of Love Library, a scandal which he had personally uncovered while trapping basement-beakerbeetles for his bology professor. Jeremy read "Peyton Place" forty-seven times, and each time wept profusely. He sent 25 conciliatory telegrams to Debby Reynolds, Such was Jeremy Bean, a man of real sympathy and understanding.

Grill

When I met Jeremy late last Friday night he was strung loosely across the boney surface of a center table at the Grill. I noticed a bulky burlap sack caught in his limp fingers. The bag clinked as I kicked it aside. I cautiously eyed Jeremy's keen features. He was visibly shaken. He acknowledged my present and began to mumble something about "a debris that would mar our glorious celebration." Then he became came more incoherant, repeating over and over some story about cleaning up an impossible mess of broken wire and piles of paper. Jeremy looked as if he had been working very hard. I tried to remember if this clean-up-paint-up-fixup-week. It was May Day, maybe Jeremy had sabotaged a Communist celebration. This seemed im-The Regents possible. wouldn't let these people near here. I ordered a beer and began to figet with my Pershing Rifles honorary watch-for, wondering what had happened to good old Jeremy. Then the burlap sack slipped from Jere' fingers and several empty beer cans rolled out across the bar floor. Jeremy jerked upright. He pulled out his Lincoln Centennial button, which he always carried with him, and began to finger it tenderly. Our eyes clinched in an embrace of sympathy and un-derstanding. Then he spoke. Transfer

Jeremy Bean, a transfer student from Akron, Ohio, felt more a part of Lincoln than many long-time residents. He knew this and was proud of it. As the days of celebration neared, Jeremy's special delight, the Centennial Mall, with its landscape and trees and quaint terraces, was still not really the idyllic imitation of a Nebraska countryside which Jeremy thought it should be. Thus Jeremy slipped into downtown Lincoln at 10 P.M. Friday night intent on adding that last touch which would really make the mall a picture of the idyllic Nebraska country side he loved so well. Jeremy slipped into downtown Lincoln with a sack full of 123 empty beer cans. The business-district was deserted, awaiting the flood of bands and floats which were to come in the morning. It was here in the deserted village Jeremy witnessed a bitter fight. Raging across the length of the Centennial Mall, four men were ripping and tearing into each other and into several racks of men's suits and gay spring dresses placed about the terraced

Wreckage

Seeing such a mess in the very center of his great community pride, Jremy knew he must act to restore the ruin. The four store owners were working their way down 13th street, each indescriminantely ripping apart the Centennial bunting which decorated the other's store. When the battle had subsided Jeremy began feverishly to pick up the wreckage. After several hours of exhausting labour. Jeremy limped into the Grill. It was there that I pieced together from good old Jer's tired lips the reason behind the little-known incident of heavy fighting on 13th and O.

It seems that there was a horrible oversight on the part of the Centennial Chairman In Charge Of Modern American Merchandise. This Centennial Chairman In Charge etc. had erroneously given the exclusive rights to display merchandise on the mall to all four of Lincoln's leading department stores. Thus Ben Campsack, Bob Skirnus, Ollie Mishnuss and Dwaine Snoo (owners respectively of the four really main-street stores) each thought he had the only commercial display on the mall, and each arrived at the same time with their special "Centennial Special Sales for Glorious Special Centennial Days Special Centennial Prices Sale!" Consequently the displays of four stores, the signs and samples and racks of clothes, were trampled in one wild angry crash as Campsack, Skirnus, Mishnuss and Snoo fought to the death to see who' smodern American merchandise was going to be displayed on Lincoln's beautiful Centennial Mall.

PLANLES

Nebraskan Letterip

Trunk Tax To the Editor

Never before since the head tax had the state Hexacameral been in such a dither. There was nothing more to tax, and what taxes there were had taken a heavy toll. Nary a drop of alcohol was to be found, and all the property owners had moved to Senator Plumb-er's tax free, low rent housing plan. All domestic animals, who had long ago felt the wrath of the Hexacameral, were now in the hands of the Humane Soci-

The Senators paced, stomped, shouted, pounded, orated, jumped up and down, got red, and re-moved their white collars and swore, but try as they did they could find nothing more to tax. At first they had considered the toe tax, but Senator Purdelo, Ohaha's biggest political contributor, a horse track owner, had been born with 18 toes, which no one had bothered to remove. Can you imagine what his tax would have been? And since each toe was assessed by weight, and his had that same comfortable look as those of all racetrack owners', this tax would have been grossly unfair,

"Pshaw," the good Sena-tor argued, "Hasn't the man been punished enough by now, what with buying extra wide shoes and all; rather than going barefoot and drawing attention."

Then there was the hair tax proposal. Actually the bill had been passed once. They thought it would be such a break for the overburdened old folks, but later there were such complaints from the County Assessors that it had to be repealed.

But all of a sudden an idea struck Senator Phil Beaver of Cadilac. He reasoned that anyone could be missing a toe or a nose (a nose tax had once been proposed to be assessed according to length, but the Governor had vetoed it on the grounds that it would discriminate against him), but there were two appendages everyone had to have: a head (already bringing in a rate of $5 per pound) and a trunk. The head tax had been fatty, but now at last they had a way to tax even University students. So the bill sailed through committee, and just as it was about to be voted upon Senator Terrible Plumber of Scottshump twice got up, shouted, and sat down again. But then it occurred to him he had something to say. "Trunk could be taken to mean anything," he bel-lowed. "Farmers who support land conservation would be penalized for hav-ing windbreaks." He screamed that, "Millions of grandmothers would have to seek new places to store their old beer steins." He fnally fniished by shout-This will be the worst calamity since the state and I became Republicans after F.D.R's death." The bill finally passed, however. The wording was clearly defined and Kneebraskee became the first state in the union to have a torso tax.

Now I sit here alone reminiscing. I am the only person left in the state, Shortly after the bill's passage the auctioning of sorority houses became a common sight as their inhabitants made a mass exodus to neighboring states. Shortly afterward the boys fol-lowed, what with no more panties to raid and all. So here I sit alone! Skinny, bald, desitute, but at last

> Lee A. Larsen The Short Fat Phantom

Scopes To the Editor:

Only a few weeks ago the Lincoln Community Play-house presented "Inherit the Wind", a play based on the Scopes "monkey trial," of Dayton, Tennessee, in 1925. The play, in which ag-nostic, personable Darrow and Bible-quoting, equally personable Bryan are pic-tured in their battle of doc-trines, captured memorable the invidious prejudices and dogma of rural idealism. It ended with Leo Hill, who played the Darrow-based role, forgiving Bryan and optimistically claiming for everyone the right which he had just defended - "the right to be wrong."

"The stage direction," authors Jerome Lawrence and Robert E. Lee stated in their preface to the published edition, "sets the time as 'Not too long ago.' It might have been yesterday. It could be tomorrow."

Certain Nebraskans seem to be reviving the dogma of their once favorite son, Bryan, and falling into a class somewhere between the Scopes trial and a George Orwell novel. A man with the stature and education that Professor Merton Bernstein has in his field should be able to draw more accurate conclusions from, and give more constructive criticism to, this field than could a man whose a cting knowledge seems to follow a tradition of Egyptian conservatism.

A professor's submitting his beliefs to legislative investigation is of about the same absurdity as Einstein's presenting his theories to a truckers convention for revisions.

We can do nothing but yield to Sen. Romans the "right to be wrong" and wish that our statesmen could find something a bit less medievil, a little more intelligent, on which to practice their legislative prowess.

JIM THOMAS.

Photoplay

In 1924, Nathan Leopold and Richard Loeb, both 18; both of brilliant intellect and wealthy families; both students of law at the University of Chicago, brutally killed nine-year-old Bobby Franks. Reason given: "because we damn well felt like it." Their sensational trial, involving such happy collateral issues as superiority complexes and an admitted unnatural attachment for one another, was predicted to end in a death sentence. It was for Clarence Darrow, famous trial lawyer, to attain life imprisonment for both. Meyer Levin, classmate of the two and cub reporter for the Daily News., covered the entire case and, 32 years later, fictionalized it into a best seller called "Compulsion. The Trial

"Compulsion," as translated to film by produced Richard Zanuck and director Richard Fleischner. is hardly the detailed account of the crime of the century Levin presented. Avoiding the sensational and underplaying the violence, it touches more on the trial portion of the case. In doing so, "Compulsion" achieves a tasteful account of one of the least tasteful moments in Chicago history, and also becomes perhaps this season's most interesting picture.

Bradford Dilman, in his thrid picture, is excellent as Artie Straus (Loeb)—reckless and popular. Dean Stockwell as the lonely and introverted Judd Steiner (Leopold) has proven that his youthful training as a child actor went to good purpose. But "Compulsion" is really Orson Welles' picture. In the Darrow role (and braving many pounds of padding and facial make-up), he appears on the scene as defense lawyer after the killers had pleaded guilty. Therefore, rather than actually defend the two, his task is to plead for their lives against strong, even violent, public opinion. His summation to the jury (condensing what took Darrow two days) lasts a full 12 minutes, and is the longest uninterrupted address ever in movies.

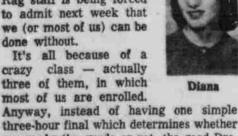

"Compulsion's" psychic picture of two gifted teen-agers, whose distorted superman philosophy is used to justify cheating, stealing and cold-blooded murder, is unforgetable. Its enactment of Leopold and Loeb's black assault on society is terrifying, but done with brilliance,

The card section? Sparkling in the au-Casual Observer

It's sort of like admitting that you could be done without, and certainly none of us would be caught doing that voluntarily. However, this being college (yeah, that rumor reached us too), and classes being classes (gad, what a horrible time of the year to bring up that sort of thing), grades being what they are (or aren't), the Rag staff is being forced to admit next week that we (or most of us) can be done without.

It's all because of a crazy class - actually three of them, in which most of us are enrolled.

three-hour final which determines whether you make the grade or not, the good Drs. in the J-School have conceived a plan whereby all the gung-ho (or otherwise) journalists in advance reporting, photography and editing classes go scooting off to the nether regions of the state to publish daily papers. This time we're heading for Grand Island and Hastings.

In so doing, virtually all of George's 'All Girl Band 'n Carroll' are disappearing, thus leaving the Rag staff a grand total of four persons for two days. However, journalists being on the whole a good group (modest, too, you will note), some of our journalistic-type cohorts have gallantly agreed to come in and take over the Rag reins while we're gone. Now here's the rub. This crew which is coming in is entirely too talented. Doesn't look good for the regulars when the twoday substitutes come through with a sterling publication with no help whatsoever from the regulars.

Editor Moyer has refused to emerge from his office during the whole affair, on the grounds that having once gotten out of the hub-bub of the outer office into the relative peace of the editor's hide-out, venturing back out into the wilds might bring on a nervous breakdown.

Head man among the group coming in will be Bob Martel, who will take over my job as managing editor. Bob is actually no newcomer to the Rag, as he presided over the sports editor's cubby-hole for two semesters a year or so ago. So if a Massachusetts-type foreign voice greets anybody who gets lost in our office looking for their Cornhusker (which won't be out yet) don't panic, it's just the Journal's star sportsman doing a bit of pinch-

As long as I've violated the don't talk about yourselves rule, might as well mention that Rag applications are now open for next semester. It's not necessary to have worked down here to apply, the jobs do pay (though you won't get rich), and we've yet to eat anyone who ventured down. Applications are in the Journalism office, 309 Burnett.

Diana Max well

Daily Nebraskan

SIXTY-EIGHT YEARS OLD Member: Associated Collegiate Press Intercollegiate Press

resentative: National Advertising Service, Published at: Room 20, Student Union ooln, Nebraska 14th & R

BUSINESS STAFF