Sports Signals

It's finally over. The hassle between Nebraska football coach Bill Jennings and the University of Oklahoma has been settled with NCAA executive secretary Walter Byers releasing the Husker coach from any charge of "tattling" to the NCAA.

Byers said Thursday that it was a West Texas man who revealed the illegal recruiting fund to the committee on infractions and that Jennings was a reluctant witness.

Nebraska Athletic Director Bill Orwig summed the whole thing up in a nutshell Wednesday when he charged Oklahoma with "evading the issue".

The affair started with Oklahoma being put on indefinite probation by the NCAA for recruiting violations. The probation would have been lessened considerably had Arthur Wood of Oklahoma City, the administrator for the recruiting fund which is under fire, opened his books to the NCAA.

Woods Blames Jennings. But, instead, Wood chose to place the blame on Jennings and take the spotlight off Oklahoma. He accused Jennings of voluntarily giving information to the NCAA concerning the fund. Wood also claimed he and Jennings were the only ones who knew about the fund. This seems like a ridiculous charge since Jennings was only an assistant coach and certainly Bud Wilkinson would have known about such a fund.

After Jennings and Wood carried on a running verbal battle for several days, Oklahoma President Dr. George Cross decided to throw his two bits into the hopper.

Dr. Cross brought former Nebraska coach Pete Elliott into the picture by giving him the idea of what Elliott would have to say. Cross stated, "He (Elliott) will swear there was no illegal recruiting fund after former Assistant Coach Bill Jennings left in 1954."

I think Dr. Cross should stick to his duties as President on the Sooner campus and let Elliott do his own talking if he has anything to say.

The thing started with a coach and a businessman and has advanced now to the presidency. Will it stop here or will it continue to the Board of Regents and then to the governors?

The whole business has gotten completely out of hand and the constant bickering has become absurd. The Sooners were apparently trying to put some of their dirty linen in someone else's closet but it is doubtful if their purpose has been accomplished.

The Sooners thought that by dragging Jennings into the squabble some of the adverse publicity would be taken away from them but the affair has mushroomed into larger proportions than even Oklahoma could have imagined. Instead of reducing the bad publicity for Oklahoma, it has probably put them in the spotlight even more than if they had accepted the probation for their dirty deeds without complaint.

The whole thing still rests with Arthur Wood. If he would turn his books over to the NCAA the probation would be lessened and everyone could rest in peace for a while.

We are glad it's over that when people pick up the morning paper they will be able to read about something on the sports page besides a senseless hassle between Oklahoma and Nebraska football personnel.

Let's turn the sports pages back to basketball, after all the cage sport is being played these days, although you couldn't tell it.
