The University office of printing and duplicating began the move last Wednesday day into Nebraska Hall, formerly the Elgin Building.

The printing and duplicating department, formerly located in West Stadium, will occupy large area of the basement of the remodeled building. Material printed there will follow a circular flow pattern.

Material Circulations

The material will circulate from a central located main office to the composing room, from the to the press room, and then will be bound.

The Conservation and Survey Division moved from the old Nebraska Hall, a 72-year-old building on the University campus, to the new structure on Monday.

The division transferred some 10,000 oil and well drilling samples to the basement of Nebraska Hall.

On March 1 the University Press and the University Examinations Service and Planning and Construction Division will move to the second floor. A portion of the second floor is also occupied by the Computer Center.

Plans are being made to move the University Extension Division to the 3rd floor; Photography productions, Journalism Photography, Bureau of Audio-Visual Aids to the 4th floor; and the School of Journalism and the Graduate School of Social Work to the 5th floor.

A comparison of the space occupied by Nebraska Hall will be with that of the Administration Building was made by Carl Donaldson, business manager, and gives an idea of the size of the renovated building. There are 6 floors in Nebraska Hall, including the basement. "Each floor of Nebraska Hall is roughly equivalent to the total area of the Administration Building," Donaldson said. The Administration Building includes 52,000 square feet, roughly 6 times as much space as the Administration Building.

The eastern third of the floors will be completed and occupied first. It will house offices which are not too closely student related; the space vacated in various buildings by these offices when they move to Nebraska

Hall will make space available for student expansion.

For example, the moving of the Extension Division will vacate the basement and first floor of Architectural Hall, which will then be used by the department of architecture. The western part of Nebraska Hall will be occupied by student related organizations.

The 17th Street entrance will be lobby space eventually, Donaldson added.

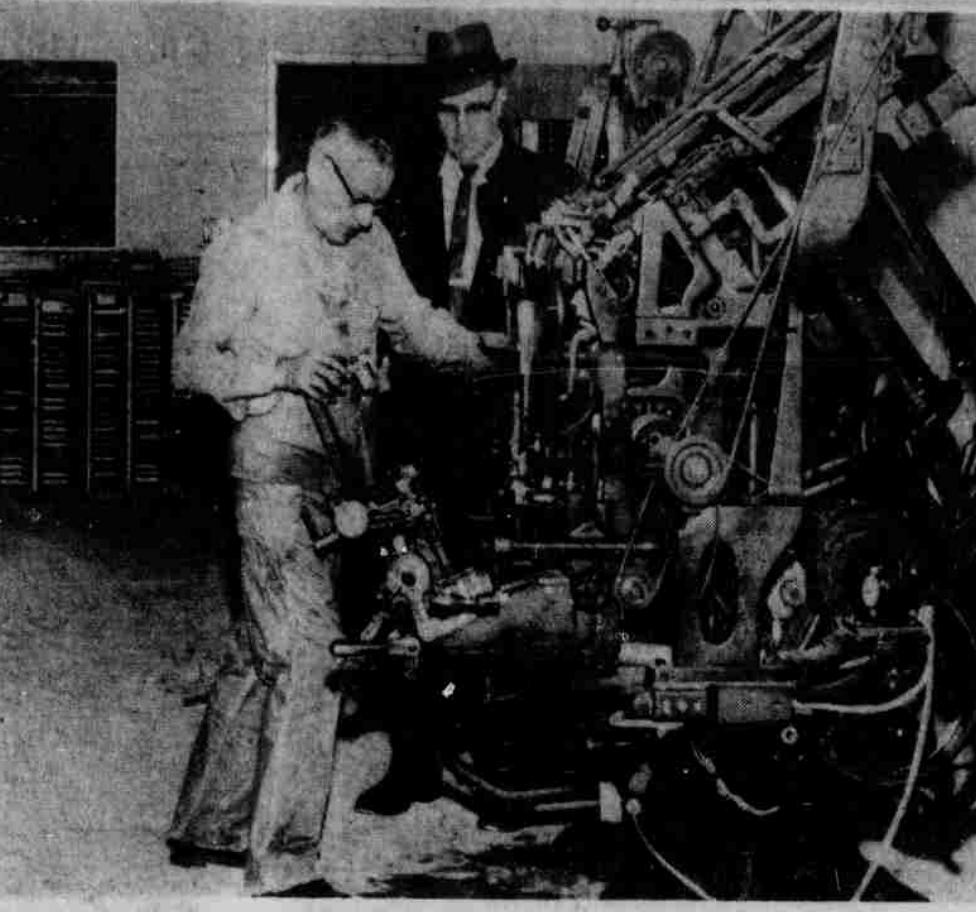

Spare Space

Reserve space in the basement, now used for work and storage rooms, will be re-modeled and moved into as it is needed.

Fifteen smaller rooms which are located under the University warehouse system will be used for storage by offices or organizations that need them, according to Donaldson.

The columns are concealed in the design of the offices and work space on the remodeled part of the lower floors.

An open house is tentatively planned for mid-March, after all the departments have been moved into the building, Donaldson said.

EARLY OCCUPATION

Machinist William Heuser (left) and Superintendent John C. Kissler look over a University printing department's linotype which was recently moved into Nebraska Hall from the department's former headquarters under the West Stadium. The Conservation and Survey Division will move into the building from the old Nebraska Hall Monday. University Examinations Service and Construction will move in on March 1.

Methodists To Interview For Faculty

Dr. Everett L. Walker, director of personnel and placement for the Methodist board of Education, will be in the teachers placement division on Friday.

From 9 a.m. to 5 p.m. he will interview graduate students interested in college teaching in the Methodist related liberal arts colleges.

Any interested student must have his master's or doctor's degree now or be expecting it in September, a spokesman for the teachers placement bureau said.

In a letter to the bureau, Dr. Walker said that college teaching opportunities in more than 100 Methodist-related liberal arts colleges in 44 states are listed in his office in Nashville, Tenn., and that the schools are looking for administrators as well as teachers.

According to the letter received no restrictions are placed on prospective teachers in the Methodist schools because of religious preference.

Students are urged to sign for an appointment time in the teachers placement division in Teachers College.
