U.S. Women Unlike Swedes

Is it true that the percentage of female college students has lowered from almost 50 to 35? Is the tendency for women students to choose easier courses, since they are only studying in order to "be able to discuss with their husbands"? Are all the high positions formerly held by women, now taken over by men, even as directors of female colleges? Eva Moberg says so. Personally I have watched the marriage hysteria of teenage girls in your country, but I thought that was more of a passing adolescent problem — unfortunate because it actually resulted in many premature marriages, but not really a mirror of society.

In subsequent articles, Eva Moberg tells the horrible story of "The New Cavewoman." Back to the old time way of reasoning that men are more intelligent—but if the college trend is as I just described it, this will soon be a true way of reasoning and we will have entered a vicious circle. And further, American women are so indoctrinated with what happiness is involved with being just a wife and mother, that when they are unhappy, they feel ashamed of it, hide it, and this causes great tension and decreases happiness even more.

According to my experience it is an obligation in your country to be happy, and it could very well be that in the situation of the housewife, the phenomenon is worse. But it is still hard to believe that so many unhappy people could go around pretending to each other without ever really talking.

Human beings are tragically skillful actors, though.

In the good old times when women "stood by the stove, bearing children," there was work in the home, they had a profession. Now, it is said that companies making household machinery often include a lot of unnecessary buttons to press so as to give the manipulator a feeling of doing more. Household chores have the quality that they take up exactly the amount of time you have. So a poor housewife doing a job that could be taken care of in ten hours a week, maybe spends fifty hours on it and she can actually get tired and look overworked.

In one way the U.S. ought to be better off than Sweden—you have the women's clubs. They could be an outlet. But as I have seen them, they constitute a superficial therapy that any reasonably intelligent woman who will easily despise soon enough. Naturally there are all kinds. But Eva Moberg does not even mention them; she says that the only contact with society most U.S. housewives have is shopping. So they prolong it and make it complicated, and ruthless business men take the opportunity to earn more money.

What a terrible social disease if half of the population accomplishes next to nothing and this without being aware of it and enjoying the leisure!

A black picture. It cannot be true. Or can it? Of course, people are usually unhappy. But let's not be philosophical. I won't even ask for possible solutions, but I would love to hear opinions on how the U.S. situation is according to you.

For in Sweden the career woman is still the real victim. But tomorrow we may have what you have today.

Magazine Gives J-School $1,000

A $1,000 grant to aid University journalism students has been received from the Reader's Digest Foundation, Dr. William E. Hall, director of the School of Journalism, announced today.

Purpose of the grant is to provide travel and expense money for advanced student writers working on assignments throughout the State and beyond Nebraska's borders.

Including this grant, the Reader's Digest Foundation has provided the School of Journalism a total of $3,500 since 1960, Hall said.

The funds are used by magazine article and depth reporting students working under the direction of Neale Coppel, associate professor of journalism.
