Lady-Like Female

Continued from Page 4 go along with the idea that girls in sports cannot be ladies. "This is not at all true," she said.

Sometimes girls feel selfconscious if they can do some sport better than boys, she said, but "boys should be the ones to be self-conscious because they should be able to do it four times better than a girl because of their physical make-up." Speaking of the future of girls' track, Carol said, 'It's not going to get into universities for awhile, but I think it will eventually." She said a start has been made at Texas A&I, where scholarships are given for girls' track.

'We always get beat by the Russians and everybody's getting concerned,' she said. "Girls are now given a chance and we're finding some good women athletes who can compete in world competition."

She said that many high schools are starting track programs for girls now. 'It's in the high schools,' she said, "where you find out if you have the potential. Then places like Roberts help out. That's the only way it'll come to anything," she said. Carold added that "the best athletes aren't 16 or 17 -they have to work on it for four or five years to become really good. The Russians who hold the titles are 27 or 28, and have been competing for 10 years." Carol is majoring in physical education and mathematics in Teachers College. She has an over-all average of 8.0, and had an 8.1 average last semester.

She said she thought she wanted to be a math teacher in a high school, and coach girls' track after school, but she will have to wait and see what opportun ties are available.

To keep in shape, Carol runs from Pound Hall to the coliseum every night but Wednesday and then works out with the discus, javelin and shot. She has classes from 8:30 until 5:30, is carrying 18 hours, and works 15 hours a week on the switchboard at Pound Hall.

Carol was recently se lected as a student assistant for Pound Hall next year. Then there's Carol's roommate, Sue VanDeWalle. She, too, is on the track team, is from Cedar Rapids, is majoring in physical education and mathematics, and has an over-all average of
