

New university program to examine female health care, body awareness

To help university women know their bodies and how they function, the University Women's Action Group (UWAG) is developing a women's health care program, said Liz Warner, a sophomore art major from Lincoln and acting UWAG chairperson.

The program, which Warner said should be ready in April, will be presented to UNL sororities and women's residence hall floors. As an informal rap session, it will cover vaginal health, body awareness and health practices, nutrition, how drugs affect the body and expectations from gynecologists.

Warner said she hopes to have pamphlets on women's health care to distribute at the rap sessions, and the women's health care books, Our Bodies, Ourselves and Getting Clear, to sell at a discount through the Women's Resource Center.

She describes the program as a much needed project. Women's health programs now offered to university women are limited, she said.

Women can obtain information about their bodies only from the University Health Center or the Health Aides, she said, but "that isn't enough."

She added that it is surprising how little students know about sexuality and birth control.

According to Southeast Community College instructor Nancy Forst of Lincoln, who talked on self-help medicine for women and other women's health issues at the Feb. 3, Women/Speak '76, projects of this type are needed everywhere.

She said that some women who visit doctors for health care often are treated rudely by doctors who believe the problem is psychological.

She added that most doctors are overworked and sometimes they must make quick decisions.

"Women need to regain an interest and control of their body," she said. "We should be able to take care of ourselves and each other rather than hand over (women's health care) to someone who isn't concerned."

getting ahead

Three UNL students have received travel grants for study at Japanese universities during the 1976-77 academic year from Kawasaki Motors Corp. of Lincoln.

The students awarded the travel grants were: Kathleen Wilson, a junior history major from North Platte; Lynn Kahookela, a sophomore from Hastings majoring in anthropology; and Fred Dub, a sophomore majoring in political science from St. Edward.

Two alternates were designated by the selection committee: Mark Hinman, a junior from Lincoln majoring in political science and Justin Eldridge, a sophomore in University Studies program from Hutchinson, Kan.

A 1974 UNL graduate has received a $5,000 fellowship for graduate study in journalism, the UNL School of Journalism has announced.

Timothy Anderson, publisher of the Seward County Independent, will be awarded the Gilbert and Martha Hitchcock fellowship established in 1975, said Neale Copple, Journalism School director.

Accounting honorary is hatched

By Becky Brugman

After two years of preparation, Beta Alpha Psi accounting honorary has become a reality at UNL, said Richard Metcalf, chapter adviser and professor of accounting.

The honorary was chartered Feb. 28. Complying with national rules, a Beta Alpha Psi chapter cannot be formed at a campus until an accounting club has been on the campus for at least two years. The current UNL Accounting Club was formed in 1968.

The Accounting Club will not be abolished now that the honorary has formed, Metcalf said. Everyone in Beta Alpha Psi is an Accounting Club member, but because of the honorary's requirement, not all Accounting Club members are Beta Alpha Psi members, he said.

Membership requirements in the honorary include a cumulative grade point average of 2.5 with a 3.0 in accounting, and students also must be in the upper 35 percent of their business class. A one time fee of $25, with $12 going to the national headquarters and the remaining amount used in the local chapter must be paid by the student, Metcalf said.

The club has no grade point requirement and charges $1 a semester membership dues.

Beta Alpha Psi was formed at UNL by Metcalf to provide an organization for accounting majors that has a national backing, he said. The chapter provides a way of honoring accounting students, other than in the classroom.

Students also practice their profession before graduation by planning programs for at least half of the chapter's required 12 annual meetings, Metcalf said, although invited speakers may present the other half.

Field trips and the tutoring of other UNL students are among the honorary's activities, Metcalf said.

The UNL chapter is the country's 103rd Beta Alpha Psi chapter, he said.

Grady quits campaign

"There's no way in heaven or hell that I'd make it, so I'm not going to run," said Fred Grady, a UNL political science major from Broken Bow.

He filed for state senator in the 43rd legislative district March 1, but closed his campaign Wednesday after four other persons filed for the office.

"I ran under the assumption no one else was running," he said, "but now the field is really crowded."

Grady said three candidates, including incumbent Otho Kime of Valentine, already have filed and said a good friend of his, a Broken Bow businessman, plans to file later this week.
