'84 movies . . .

To give Hardbodies some credit, its slick ad campaign ("The Utah film society says this is the best movie they've seen . . . this morning") and the exuberance of its youthful stars are commendable.

Mike's Murder also has to qualify as a spring movie, but it hit Lincoln late. It's playing to big audiences at the Plaza now, however. Debra Winger plays the lead character Betty, whose former beau is murdered halfway through the film after a drug deal. However, the film depended on Winger and her popularity a little too much. The plot itself is, really kind of slow, which is actually pretty tough with a hot topic like cocaine to work around. But, Mike, (Mark Keyloun) turns out to be a loser with a rotten sense of judgment who meets a well-deserved fate. Winger then sets out to discover why, and beats his old friends one by one. The whole thing boils down to a harrowing encounter with Pete (Darrell Larson) who was with Mike the night he was killed. We know why Mike was killed, therefore taking the mystery out of it. The danger doesn't really threaten Winger for very long. So, what we're left with is a detective story with no real intrigue.

Run-down of the other films still showing:
Against All Odds — Jeff Bridges and Rachel Ward almost carry this adventure film until the numerous plot twists and backstabbing muddle and confuse it instead of add to the amazement.

Footloose — Kevin Bacon plays an energetic lad of the 1980s forced to exist in the intolerable moral and religious 1940 atmosphere in Utah. Footloose is supposed to be about dancing, but what little of that there really is should be part of someone's gymnastic workout. Footloose's appeal stays strong though, until the very final scene when silliness takes over to a ruinous extreme.

Ice-man — John Lone is fascinating as a 40,000 year-old man brought into the 20th century, but the movie dies a slow death by freezing out its other characters and not fully taking advantage of Ice-man's situation.

Moscow on the Hudson — The best of the lot so far. The story gets too patriotic on America and too protective of its star Robin Williams at times, but overall, the movie flows along with quick wit and honesty.

Police Academy — One of those that shouldn't have to grow on you, but predictable ensemble comedy makes that a necessity. Police Academy isn't as bad as I originally thought, but it still isn't as good as it should be. It has been winning the box-office wars for two straight months though, so the word-of-mouth must be pretty good.

Romancing the Stone — Kathleen Turner and Michael Douglas make what could have been a low-grade Raiders rip-off into genuine fun as part of a race to get a rare jewel in Columbia. A lot of fun and action, and what more could you ask for?

Splash — Aside from a restrained performance by leading man Tom Hanks, Splash is just another plain fun movie that works for the right reason. It's just good entertainment. Daryl Hannah is great as the mermaid.
