

Style

Mark Davis/Daily Nebraskan

Susanne Maza shows off her new shades.

THE LINCOLN EXCHANGE bistro & bar

Continental & American Cuisine
Served in the Atmosphere of a
Lincoln Center Historical Landmark

—full service from 11 am to midnight—
—bar open until 1 am—
—imported & american wines—

476-7200
132 S. 13th ST.

King Cool rules as fools drool, 'Who's the dude in the shades?'

By Bill Casari
Daily Nebraskan Staff Writer

Check out Huey's shades. Look familiar? Huey Lewis wasn't the first to flaunt "cool."

The Bausch and Lomb black "Wayfarer" sunglasses date from the early 1950's but they came back into style about two years ago and now top the eyewear charts, said Andy Peterson, optician at The Optical Shop. He said the lenses are solid glass and have a uniform tint.

"The wayfarer is a very inexpensive, high-quality sunglass," Peterson said. Wayfarer lenses are optically ground and will not irritate the eyes like some cheaper lenses do. Bausch and Lomb Ray Ban Wayfarer's sell for about $40.

Roger Delabarre, of Modern Eye Wear, said no permanent eye damage will result from wearing sunglasses that aren't optically correct, but said the eye may become irritated. Lenses that aren't optically correct don't give a true image, he said.

Other popular styles include People look on the more expensive glacier glasses that have leather blinders on the sides to reduce glare while skiing.

Jon Ferguson, store manager at the Lawlor's downtown, said glacier glasses help keep eyes from watering and prevent eye corners from being sunburned. He warned that it is dangerous to drive with them because they reduce peripheral vision. Ferguson said other popular glasses are the French Bollé and Vuarnet (pronounced varnay) frames. Bollé lenses are plastic, and the glasses sell for about $16. Vuarnet lenses are glass and sell for about $70. He said one advantage of glass lenses is that they don't scratch as easily as plastic. The most popular glasses at Lawlor's are "cat eye" frames.

"People actually came into the store and asked for 'Risky Business' glasses," said Bob Robinson, a record buyer for Dirt Cheap. Actor Tom Cruise wore Wayfarer glasses in the 1983 hit movie. Ferguson said the glasses increased in popularity after the movie.

"Sunglasses are more accessible than a BMW," Robinson said. Ferguson said glacier glasses are popular partly because David Lee Roth of Van Halen wears them.

"I have different colors of glasses to match different outfits," said Susan Steinmetz, a freshman business major. She said she wears glasses about half the time for fashion's sake, and the rest of the time to protect her eyes. Brent Furse, a junior advertising major, said people tell him he looks like Huey Lewis when he wears his shades.

Randy Mack said he bought his Bausch and Lomb Wayfarer sunglasses because they were in style at the time. He said he thinks of them as more of a fashion accessory than a practical item.

Continued on Page 13

Heads
Together

WE MAKE HEADS TURN

Call for an appointment with Mary, David, Kahn or John.

Just a walk away at 17th & "R" St.

Head Together: 475-4902

No Need To Travel To The Tropics For A Tan . . .

- UVA TANNING BEDS
- DIGITAL AUDIO DISC PLAYER
- PRIVATE, LUXURIOUS ROOMS

GOLDEN TAN

OUR NAME SAYS IT ALL

3230 South 13th
Lincoln, Ne. 68502

421-3533

Help us cover you.

Daily Nebraskan's
Newsline
472-1763

Ear
Piercing

THE Pierced
Ear

The Centrum Plaza

474-4676