

Gettin' a feel of the farm

Lincoln pre-schoolers pet a sheep at the Block and Bridle's annual Kids Day on East Campus.

Audrey Weston, a special education teacher at Eastridge Elementary, said Kids Day is a concrete, hands-on experience that students need. She said students spend the week before the trip learning farm vocabulary in the classroom.

IF THERE'S LEADERSHIP IN YOU, OCS CAN BRING IT OUT.

OCS (Army Officer Candidate School) is a 14-week challenge to all that's in you...the mental, the physical, the spirit that are part of what makes a leader.

If OCS were easy, it couldn't do the job. It wouldn't bring out the leader in you, or help you discover what you have inside.

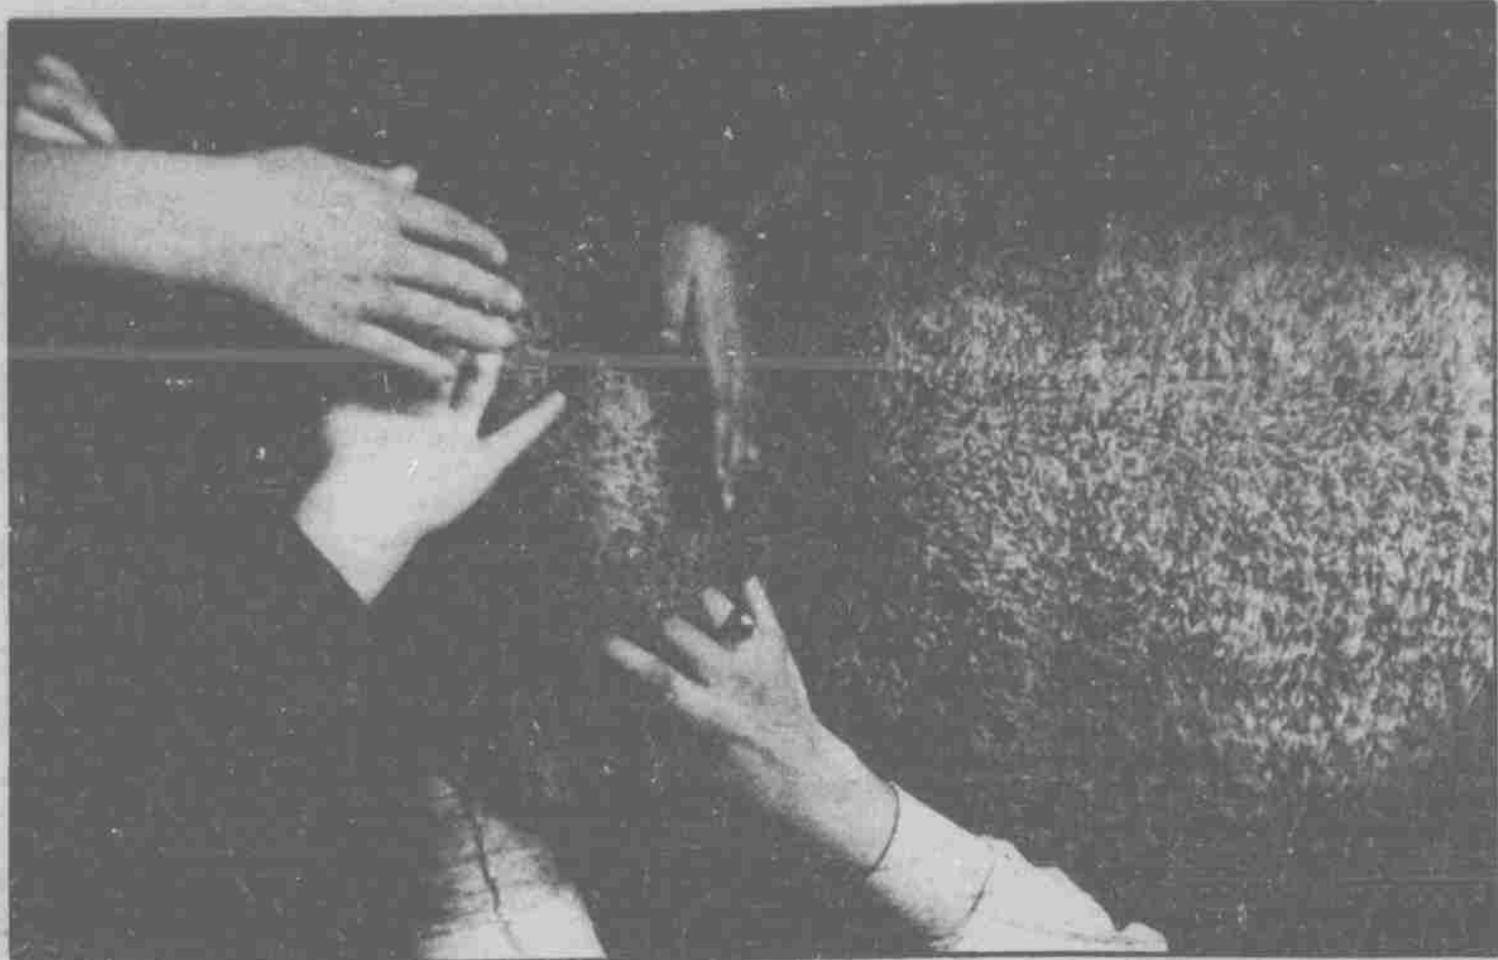

But when you finish and graduate as a commissioned officer in the Army, you'll know. You'll know you have what it takes to lead. And you'll be trim, alert, fit, and ready to exercise the leadership skills that civilian companies look for.

If you're about to get your degree and you want to develop your leadership ability, take the OCS challenge.

Call your local Army Recruiter, and ask about OCS.

Tutor's tips dissolve science phobia

Albert Einstein once said, "The whole of science is nothing but a refinement of everyday thinking."

Many UNL science students would tell you it's a lot more than that, or at least seems to be. Unfortunately, most of the difficulties students face in science arise from the inability to relate to the laws and concepts of science and get a true feel for the subject.

"Every new law you learn you must study in the context of what you already know," said Vijay Tatkar, a math and science tutor at UNL's Educational Learning Center. "You should try to understand the interrelations between laws and observations and not view them as isolated facts."

Tatkar said it's important that students be systematic when taking notes in science courses. He suggested students leave a large left hand margin in their notes to fill in later with key equations and phrases to be reviewed and referred to when solving problems.

"Take notes on ideas, not words," Tatkar said.

When reading your textbook you will come upon many new terms. Tatkar said you have to know exactly how to apply them.

"See what its limitations are, in what context it will work and when it will not," he said.

As in mathematics, Tatkar said, solving all assigned problems is essential.

"When you approach a certain problem," he said, "make a list of what is given and what is to be found. Try to develop a chain of logical steps leading to the answer and express these steps in the form of equations. Finally, correlate the processes you have used to the concepts and principles you have covered in class."

Tatkar said by fitting the concepts into a broad view and seeing how observations in the lab support these ideas, students can obtain a feel for the subject and dissolve the phobias they may have for studying science.
