Dawes' Girds the Loins of the Republic and Moves an Executive Session

Pathetic Ending of Three Months of Superfluous Breath

The Senate Proceeds to Business and Considers the Chinese.

The Senate in Executive Session. Washington, May 4-4 p. m.— Senator Dawes tor, the floor immedistributed opening of the sen-ate and began a speech deprecating the deformined opposition of the dem-ocre's to the consideration of the proper business of the senate. He had offered his resolution for the election of officers in the senate in good faith, and according to without ball. the custom, but the minority bad in-sisted that the majority should not rule. The great principles of republicanism were threatened, and careful steps must be taken to prepare the safeguards against further assaults. Meanwhile other matters demanded attention. "The contest had bet-ter be fought with the loins of the republic girded about her," he said. Recognizing the inability of the majority to rule in this case, and the necessity of attending to other public business, Mr. Dawes moved that the senate proceed to the consideration of executive business. Pendleton desired to reply but the ayes and noes having been called, Dawes did not withdraw the raction and the vote stood ayes 53, noes none, and the senate went into executive session at 12:40.

At Last. WASHINGTON, May 5-1 a. m .-The senate went into executive seasion-syes 53, noes none,

The senate, in executive session, at once took up the nominations that had been acted on, and the follow-ing were confirmed without opposition: Robert R. Hitt, of Illinois, to be assistant secretary of state; Hiram bay in a tug. lian affeirs; Alfred M Jones, United States marshal for the northern district of Illinois; Sanford R. Hudson. of Wisconsin, associate justice of the surreme court of Dakota; Jaz. P Jones, postmaster at Terre Haute,

Other nominations were taken up separately and appropriately referred. There was considerable debate, but no outbreak, and nothing was said that would indicate that those nominations were to be taken up which were to be considered contested, among those stready in the hands of the committee, or as to what opposition might be expected to any of them. An hour and a half was consumed in referring the nominations, and the senate took up the Chinese

The first treaty considered was that of immigration. Senator Farley, of California, made a speech in explanation of what the people of the Pacific slope desired in the way of restrictions to the influx of all classes of Chinese, Those in search of commercial, educational or mercantile advantages would always be welcome. As the cast-offs of European countries had been sent back before they landed on the Atlantic shores, so was it desired by the dwellers on the Pacific coast that the lowest classes of Chinese types of immorality, and those from landing there.
